0. Executive Summary

0.1. Introduction

The Observatory on the Protection of Taxpayers’ Rights (OPTR) is a neutral, non-judgmental platform for monitoring developments concerning the effective protection of taxpayers’ fundamental rights worldwide. Each year, these developments are compiled and composed in the Yearbook on Taxpayers’ Rights, which provides a unique overview of the minimum standards for the protection of taxpayers’ rights, the status of the legal framework and the case law on the matter.

The 2021 Yearbook initially provides an executive summary of the most significant findings of the year, which serves to illustrate the overarching trends. This introduction is followed by a detailed description of the method used for the underlying data.

The 2021 Yearbook elaborates on 12 different areas and provides the full set of findings for each of them, supported by reference to the underlying empirical data from the 56 reports provided for the year.

Appendix A adds an overview of the topical highlights of this year, and Appendix B outlines the full details of the protection of taxpayers’ rights per country.

0.2. Overview of findings

The year 2021 in many ways established a new normal for taxpayers. Following a year of extraordinary measures to deal with the ongoing pandemic, this past year saw a few of the newly arisen trends solidify into trends for the future as well. For more than 5 years, ever since the General Report of the 69th IFA Congress in Basel in 2015, the OPTR’s work has been reporting on these developments in the protection of taxpayers’ rights.

In terms of protecting taxpayers’ rights, 2021 saw several examples of measures being implemented as a necessity during the pandemic, providing for practical improvements on the protection of taxpayers’ rights. While these measures may have been a necessary evil, they have also proven effective as permanent protections for taxpayers’ rights. More general developments have been reported as well, and overall, the continuous trend has been that 2021 was quite the foreseeable year in this regard.

0.2.1. Digital, remote communication: The new normal

One continuous and undeniable development ever since 2015 has been in how tax administrations communicate with and guide taxpayers. The ever-increasing digitalization of global communication has affected this area for years now, but the immediate need to find a replacement for physical presence during the pandemic has catalysed developments in this area. This trend towards the need for further digital service channels has been noted by the OECD as well, in its 2021 report Tax Administration: Digital Resilience in the COVID-19 Environment.¹

Following this trend, digital and secure communication between tax administrations and taxpayers was given a strong boost in 2021, and several states surveyed have taken concrete actions to expand the scope of their registration programmes with enhanced security and confidentiality measures for taxpayers. In the same vein, tax administrations have extended their taxpayer assistance programmes in order to facilitate remote tax compliance and assisting taxpayers with their queries. Overall, these steps taken in 2021 have all contributed to the process of identifying taxpayers, communicating with them and completing tax assessments under difficult circumstances. However, notwithstanding the increased capacities in data management of tax administrations, taxpayers’ right to habeas data suffered some hindrances in 2021 based on the alleged protection of the general interest.

0.2.2. The (further) rise of e-filing, and other baby steps towards a constructive dialogue

The pandemic provided a decisive impetus for e-filing in 2021, a time during which a significant number of countries surveyed reported progress. Electronic invoicing, electronic taxpayer folders and tax “rewards” for businesses filing account documents electronically are among the several measures taken by many jurisdictions worldwide to level the playing field between taxpayers and tax authorities, at the cost of an increased reporting burden.

Regarding the building of a constructive dialogue between the parties, the actions taken by Switzerland stand out as an important step towards a best practice. While approving a new law aiming to the digitalization of tax procedures, the country approved a new code of conduct between taxpayers and tax authorities that aims to sustainably strengthen the “historically growing” relationship of respect and trust between taxpayers, tax representatives and tax administrations.

0.2.3. Public country-by-country reporting, DAC7: Shrinking confidentiality

See also M. Bocachica, Tax Authority Establishes Requirements for Circulation of Electronic Invoices as Negotiable Titles (2 Mar. 2021), News IBFD.

Along with a major data leak occurring during the period, the trend in favour of establishing regulatory safeguards for confidentiality, while seemingly stable in other regions of the world, was dealt a blow in the European Union in the name of transparency with the enactment of disclosure of country-by-country information on the direct taxation of multinational enterprises. Disclosure of information in the name of promoting corporate transparency comes with the price of the confidentiality of the taxpayer, which is particularly alarming at a time when the circumstances have also endangered that confidentiality due to the necessary new measures for communicating with taxpayers. Although these two negative developments are unrelated, put together, they add up to an overall negative development in confidentiality for taxpayers in 2021.

Proportionality was put to the test as well, as tax authorities have been allowed to access greater quantities of information given sufficient guarantees for taxpayers, including the strengthening of safeguards in the context of bulk interception systems. However, 2021 was also a time for the endorsement of naming and shaming, something that clearly has to be taken as a negative development for taxpayers' individual rights.

Likewise, there were negative developments regarding the interaction between taxpayer privacy and freedom of information, since several courts ruled in favour of disclosing taxpayer

information even when possibly used for political purposes,\textsuperscript{12} when particularly protected due to its nature or when linked to the exercise of other rights, such as the right to object.\textsuperscript{13}

\subsection*{0.2.4. Taxpayer rights in normal and intensive tax audits: Baby steps towards the goal.}

As mentioned in section 0.2.1., several of the novel measures to ensure taxpayers’ rights during the pandemic filtered through to tax assessments and audit procedures, resulting in positive developments, but unfortunately there was no positive difference in the level of compliance with minimum standards and best practices relating to the most intensive audits. The pandemic also affected negatively the time limits for tax audits, setting a trend for longer audits, undetermined in time, although some positive developments in this regard are reported from \textbf{China (People’s Rep.)}.

\textsuperscript{14} However, the growing trend towards allowing the participation of independent technical experts in the framework of tax audits (as it is the case in 92\% of the surveyed jurisdictions, according to Chart 28) is promising.\textsuperscript{15} Back in 2015, it was reported that the practice of \textbf{Denmark} of involving professional associations in the appointment of independent experts was particularly interesting in this respect.\textsuperscript{16} In addition, positive developments regarding \textit{non bis in idem} have been reported in \textbf{Spain}\textsuperscript{17} and \textbf{Chile},\textsuperscript{18} and \textit{audi alteram partem} also received further support in \textbf{Spain}.\textsuperscript{19}

While 2021 was characterized by notable activity in terms of criminal prosecutions and penalties imposed for the commission of tax offences, as indicated in section 7.1., this did not make an appreciable difference to the level of compliance with minimum standards and best practices relating to the most intensive audits. As regards the limited nature of the powers of the Tax Administration in the context of these audits, only China (People’s Rep.) reported a shift towards fulfilment of the best practice by adding new provisions that the inspection bureau may conduct inspections before filing a case in accordance with the law if necessary. Criminal investigation authority usually acts based on the cases handed over by tax agencies or other governmental institutions. While doing so, booking standards shall be met.\(^{20}\)

Nemo tenetur continues a downward trend, as the only reported development, that of Mexico, requires accountants preparing financial statements to report to the tax authorities any possible infringements they may have become aware of in the course of their duties.\(^{21}\) The need for court authorizations for searches is mostly overlooked in practice, considering the recent developments in Brazil,\(^{22}\) Bolivia,\(^{23}\) the United Kingdom\(^{24}\) and the United States.\(^{25}\)

0.2.5. More prosecutions, stronger (accumulated) sanctions

A persistent trend towards expansion of punitive tax law continued in 2021, with a significant increase in tax penalties during the period, sometimes at the expense of proportionality. At the same time, the concurrence of criminal and administrative sanctions in respect of substantially identical facts was strengthened through rules and jurisprudential interpretations that ratify the difference between different types of sanctions. A very good example is the new Tax Collection Act of Chinese Taipei, which goes in both directions, though there are many other... examples. However, other developments have served to counteract this expansionary trend: a noteworthy decision on non bis in idem in Brazil, the upholding of proportionality by imposing no sanctions on specific cases of malfunction of the tax authorities’ platform in Greece, new exculatory circumstances based on the previous behaviour of the taxpayer in Portugal, and special regimes for penalties considering the circumstances arising out of the COVID-19 pandemic in the Netherlands and Peru, among other countries.

Consequently, there appears to have been an increase in criminal prosecutions and penalties imposed for tax fraud and related offences in Germany, where convictions on the so-called “cum/ex trades” were served, Italy, where the tax authorities arraigned a multinational corporation for allegedly committing VAT fraud; and the United States, in a number of cases in which several courts held proportionate the application of the 50% maximum penalty against taxpayers for wilful failure to file a timely Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts.

See W. Hoke, Italy Accuses Booking.com of Evading €153 Million in VAT (10 June 2021), News IBFD.
(FBAR), since this represents a careless disregard of a known or obvious risk, as well as violation of a known legal duty, among many other developments.

0.2.6. Broader relief vis-à-vis tax collection: The aftermath of the (ongoing) pandemic

Coming out of a global pandemic and economic crisis, funds have been scarce for most states for the last 2 years, and, to mitigate the negative economic consequences of this, several of them have introduced postponements on collecting taxes, reduced interest rates for late payment of taxes and granted some extension to due dates for compliance. Although this has reportedly been a costly affair for the states concerned, the measures provide interesting contributions in regard to how to deal with taxpayers in financial distress on a continuous basis. In addition, to prevent taxpayer bankruptcy during the hardship of the pandemic, several countries have introduced specific measures in line with the best practice. Going forward, these interim measures, including new legislation in Colombia regulating the rescue and recovery mechanism for companies in insolvency proceedings and a tax deferral scheme for small and medium-sized enterprises of Denmark that was approved by the European Commission, could ideally provide inspiration for how to further prevent taxpayer bankruptcy and insolvency.

0.2.7. Taxpayer participation in cross-border procedures: A long and winding road

Unfortunately, taxpayers’ rights in cross-border situations are weakened in practice, as they are generally not involved in the cross-border procedures carried out between the states. This situation entails the risk of taxpayers not exercising and protecting their rights in these procedures effectively. The situation in 2021 was no different, and it provides an interesting view to these challenges in the aftermath of implementing different cross-border measures in recent years. Probably the most important development regarding the matter was the introduction of new reporting obligations in the European Union for digital platforms and amendments to the existing framework of administrative cooperation in the field of taxation, rules adopted by the sixth amendment to the Directive on Administrative Cooperation (2011/16), approved by the Council of the European Union on 22 March 2021 (DAC7). DAC7 expands the automatic exchange of information and reporting obligations to cover certain transactions through digital platforms, which will have to collect and verify the seller’s name, address, taxpayer identification number, VAT number and business registration number, as well as identify its permanent establishments in the European Union, if applicable. Additionally, it modifies existing regulations with the aim of improving administrative cooperation in the exchange of information as regards, for instance, joint audits, information requests and data breaches.

Against this background, the European Court of Auditors affirmed that EU Member States only make limited use of the information exchanged automatically, due to either (i) weaknesses related to the timeliness, the accuracy and the completeness of automatic exchange of information; (ii) DAC2 information exchange functions being generally on time but still lacking in data quality and completeness; (iii) Member States receiving huge volumes of information, with information generally underused; (iv) DAC1 and DAC2 information not being rigorously exploited; or (v) exchanges of information having increased but some information remaining unreported, among other reasons. As a result, less than a third of the items of information received under DAC1 and DAC2, for example, resulted in further tax-related actions.

0.2.8. Have your say: Growing trend towards public consultation in the multilateral context

When reviewing the overall legal framework for the protection of taxpayers’ rights, 2021 saw a positive trend towards including taxpayers in the legislative process via public consultation. This is particularly evident at the EU level, where the European Commission has confirmed a steady movement towards greater citizen participation in EU regulatory processes in general. At the OECD level, the policy of public consultation was maintained in 2021 in several proposals, particularly regarding the digitalization of the economy. Despite this intense consultation activity, a few jurisdictions have reported a shift away from best practice, among them Slovenia, New Zealand and Poland.

41 NZ: OPTR Report (Academia) Questionnaire 2, Question 79.
42 An example given is the legislative proceedings concerning the so called New Polish Deal (Polski Ład), with hundreds of pages of new tax legislation, introducing major changes as of 1 January 2022, which were discussed by the parliament in September and October 2021, signed by the President on 15 November and promulgated on 23 November 2021. Since the subject of this legislation is complicated, extensive and regards the situation of most Polish taxpayers, the vacatio legis in this case was considered by many experts as
0.2.9. Knowledge is power: Digitalization, key for taxpayer awareness on revenue practice

In terms of the relation between taxpayers and the legislative framework for protecting their rights, it is pivotal from a practical point of view that they be able to access the relevant legal materials and that they be able to rely on any binding guidance provided by the tax authorities.\(^{43}\) In 2021, a positive trend towards a minimum standard in this area continued, and it was especially underpinned by the digitalization of tax administrations.

0.2.10. Taxpayers' bills of rights on a steady rise

Finally, 2021 marked a positive development in the area of institutional frameworks for the protection of taxpayers' rights, as more than half of the jurisdictions have now introduced taxpayers' charters or bills of rights providing a framework of certainty regarding the content and scope of taxpayers' rights and the tax authority's obligations.

0.3. Most significant developments of the year

0.3.1. Identifying taxpayers, issuing tax returns and communicating with taxpayers

Developing new ways to communicate, e.g. through virtual meetings, has provided for some obvious advantages to taxpayers, which appear to be here to stay. Among many other developments, Belgium enacted new legislation on the dematerialization of the relations between the tax authorities and taxpayers, according to which communication between them goes through an electronic mailbox, i.e., the "eBox".\(^{44}\) In addition, the so-called Administración Digital Integral (Integral Digital Administration) in Spain allows communication with taxpayers through a virtual counter. See too the Remote Support and Tax Control in Chile and the QR code-based online services in China (People's Rep.).\(^{45}\)

At the same time, these measures have propelled the need for further assisting and guiding taxpayers and, above all, have necessitated the invention of new ways to secure taxpayers' inadequate. The legislation required amendments very soon after its adoption (three amending acts in December 2021) and further (partial and numerous) amendments are expected at the beginning of 2022. Extensive administrative guidance will also be needed to deal with the resulting uncertainties. See PL: Draft Bill No. 1532-A – Government bill amending the Personal Income Tax Act, the Corporate Income Tax Act and certain other acts, available at https://www.sejm.gov.pl/Sejm9.nsf/PrzebiegProc.xsp?nr=1532 (accessed 10 Mar. 2022). privacy and confidentiality, such as a separation between tax and civil registrations to protect independent service providers for confidentiality reasons in Bulgaria, even though Ghana went in the opposite direction by unifying their citizen identification systems.\footnote{See PIN in BULSTAT register is converted into a 9-digit code from January 4, Darik News (3 Dec, 2021), available at https://darik.news/en/pin-in-bulstat-register-is-converted-into-a-9-digit-code-from-january-4.html (accessed 19 Jan, 2022). See also BG: OPTR Report (Taxpayers/Tax Practitioners), Questionnaire 2. Question 1. However, as part of the COVID-19 measures, Ghana ordered the replacement of individuals’ tax identification and social security numbers with their Ghanaian national identification card numbers, a development towards a unified citizens’ identification. See A. Ofori-Boafoa, COVID-19 Pandemic: Government Waives Penalties and interest on Outstanding Tax Arrears (16 Mar, 2021), News IBFD (accessed 19 Jan, 2022).}

Also in this area, positive developments have taken place, which include a range of specific processes to verify the taxpayer’s identity, systems to prevent impersonation or duplication, identification numbers and faceless identification schemes. The general trend in this regard is that the surveyed jurisdictions are moving towards a best practice and that improvements continue to happen on a permanent basis.\footnote{See GH: Ghana Revenue Authority Press Release, Commencement of the Use of Ghana Card PIN as TIN (3 Apr, 2021), available at https://grqa.gov.gh/commencement-of-the-use-of-ghana-card-personal-identification-number-as-taxpayer-identification-number/ (accessed 24 Mar, 2022). See also Ofori-Boafoa, supra n. 46.}

In this regard, the United States extended its PIN-based identity programme to all taxpayers able to verify their identity,\footnote{The data provided for the 2021 Yearbook reveals that 98% of the surveyed jurisdictions (47 out of 48) have systems in place to prevent unauthorized access for 83% (40 out of 48); see Chart 4.} and India continued its faceless identification scheme for assessment and appellate proceedings, although the judiciary has ruled against the system capabilities for allowing taxpayers to effectively present their cases.\footnote{See US: IRS, National Tax Security Awareness Week, Day 3: IRS expands Identity Protection PIN Opt-In Program to taxpayers nationwide, IR-2020-267, available at https://perma.co/Y3YH-MZEW (accessed 19 Jan, 2022). See also US: OPTR Report (Taxpayers/Tax Practitioners/Academia), Questionnaire 2, Question 1.}

Although reinforced through an expansion of the use of pre-populated returns in Australia, and thorough regulation on taxpayers’ rights in this regard issued in Chile, there was a noteworthy shift away from the minimum standard regarding habeas data in Belgium, where the judiciary upheld the tax authorities’ denial to a taxpayer of an information request for rectification of processing of personal data, based on the protection of the public interest.

Cooperative compliance was also boosted in 2021, and this through different paths. Among other measures, in Chile, the tax authorities were ordered to use all available means to facilitate tax compliance without unnecessary delay, demand or waiting, and in the least expensive way for taxpayers. Honduras engaged in discussion of a cooperative compliance guide in cooperation with the Vienna University of Economics and Business (WU).

In parallel, there has been an exponential growth in compliance obligations for taxpayers and third parties. In the European Union, the entry into force of domestic legislation implementing Council Directive (EU) 2018/822 (DAC6) represents a significant increase in reporting duties for taxpayers and tax advisers. In this regard, in the aftermath of the adoption of the seventh modification of Council Directive 2011/16/EU on administrative cooperation in the field of taxation (DAC7), which introduced a report obligation for digital platforms on revenues generated by sellers on these platforms as of 1 January 2023, a series of interesting cases are currently before the Court of Justice of the European Union (ECJ) regarding the proportionality of requests for information by (tax) authorities in Belgium.

Regarding assistance with compliance obligations, there were myriad developments. Among many others, dispute assistance and tax consultancy services were put into place in Australia, Tanzania, South Africa and Georgia, as were the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance (VITA) and the Tax Counsel for the Elderly (TCE) programmes in the United States. In addition, there were developments regarding the face-to-face workshops and seminars of Sweden, the Business Support Units of Malaysia, the Special Taxpayer Assistance Programme (STAP) to assist micro and small businesses in completing their income tax returns in Jamaica and the Community Volunteer Income Tax Program of Canada.

0.3.2. The issue of tax assessment

Tax administrations worldwide have been under significant pressure during the pandemic, as the limitations have also influenced the general administration and procedures, and especially the means to provide the necessary services. This has resulted in delays and backlogs, and it has also put a strain on constructive dialogue with taxpayers.

Against this background, the importance of cooperative compliance was even more significant for 2021, and it is positive to note that development throughout the years continued towards a constructive dialogue between taxpayers and revenue authorities before a tax audit occurs, increasingly built on cooperative compliance. To highlight a particularly positive example, Switzerland approved a new code of conduct between taxpayers and tax authorities which aims to sustainably strengthen the “historically growing” relationship of respect and trust between taxpayers, tax representatives and tax administrations. In addition, the practice of Chinese Taipei of offering tax “rewards” for businesses filing account documents electronically, including a waiver of verification certificates, is noteworthy. Chile developed a so-called carpeta tributaria electrónica (electronic tax folder), aiming for an improvement of the digital platforms of the Chilean tax authorities due to COVID-19. Switzerland approved a new law enabling both the Federation and the cantons to move to a digital tax procedure; however, it does not contain many details, as the digital tax procedure is still a “moving target”. For its part, in the United Kingdom, a consultation document of Her Majesty’s Revenue and Customs (HMRC) indicates an intention to increase and enhance facilities for e-filing over the next 4 years.

In Russia, the judgment of the Supreme Court in the Spetskhimprom case confirmed the duty of the tax authorities to determine the tax liability by exhausting all legal means to discover the material truth, based on all elements of which it has knowledge, in favour of or against the taxpayer, either through the taxpayer or through third parties.

0.3.3. Confidentiality

Simultaneously with the development of new ways of communicating with taxpayers, an increasing number of reporting obligations has propelled another general trend towards an increased need for confidentiality in recent years. While the overall global development has been positive recently, with most jurisdictions providing specific guarantees for confidentiality in domestic law and providing sanctions for officials making unauthorized disclosures, there has been a setback at the EU level with the introduction of Directive 2021/2101, on public disclosure of country-by-country information. Finding the right balance between collective rights and the effective protection of the individual rights of taxpayers remains a challenge. This issue was also raised before the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR) in the Finnish Satakunnan Markkinapörssi case. Furthermore, the court handed down two Grand Chamber rulings in landmark cases on the general concept of exceptions to the right to privacy through bulk interception regimes in the Big Brother Watch and Others and the Centrum För
Rättvisa\textsuperscript{73} cases. Public country-by-country reporting was also proposed by members of the United States Congress through the Disclosure of Tax Havens and Offshoring Act proposal, introduced in the House of Representatives on 5 May 2021.\textsuperscript{74} In the same vein, the question of the boundaries on requests for information by tax administrations relating to the seventh modification of Council Directive 2011/16/EU (DAC7) is currently pending before the ECJ.\textsuperscript{75} In the same vein, AG Bobek opined that the General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR)\textsuperscript{76} does not prohibit requests for information addressed by the tax authority to internet service providers, insofar as the request is linked to the determination of advertisers’ tax obligations, there is a clear legal basis in national law for such a type of data transfer and the data requested are suitable and necessary for the tax authority to complete its official tasks.\textsuperscript{77}

Legal guarantees for privacy were established in Bolivia,\textsuperscript{78} Brazil,\textsuperscript{79} Chile,\textsuperscript{80} and Ukraine,\textsuperscript{81} accompanied by enhanced confidentiality guarantees, particularly in Latin America. Brazil uses a controlled virtual system to avoid misuse and leaking, and Chile announced the use of web scraping and machine learning to detect non-compliance.

Regrettably, there was a major leak of tax agents’ personal data in Chinese Taipei, including ID numbers, addresses and dates of birth. On the other hand, a major reform of the structure of the tax authority in Colombia granted greater autonomy to the Information Security Office in the adoption of information security policies. Likewise, in Kazakhstan, a reform to Law 94-V, On Personal Data and Its Protection, required the appointment of data protection officers in all state agencies, including the tax administration.

Regarding whistle-blower protection, EU Member States had until 17 December 2021 to transpose the so-called EU Whistleblowing Directive, on the protection of persons who report breaches of Union law, including tax law. To date, only seven of the EU Member States, namely Austria, Bulgaria, Cyprus, Denmark, France, Lithuania, Malta, Portugal and Sweden, appear to have transposed said directive into domestic law. In the context of these and other developments, proportionality with regard to confidentiality has been put to the test. On the one hand, in Spain, the Supreme Court issued a series of judgments in which it limited the possibility for tax authorities to use taxpayer information to tax matters alone. In the case of the transfer of data to other administrations for non-tax purposes, the express authorization of the data subject must be stated. On the other hand, Complementary Law 187/2021 in Brazil amended the National Tax Code to expressly authorize the disclosure of tax benefits and other special treatments, based on which some states have already been disclosing that information.90

Finally, the question of exceptions to taxpayer confidentiality and disclosure by “naming-and-shaming” in the public interest was tried before the ECtHR in the L.B. v. Hungary case,91 which has been referred to the Grand Chamber. For its part, the Constitutional Court of Belgium suspended the Flemish, the Walloon and the Brussels transposition of Council Directive (EU) 2018/822 (DAC6) insofar as it relates to certain aspects of the reporting obligation of cross-border tax arrangements as imposed on “lawyers”, in an important development regarding the legal professional privilege.92 In the same vein, a preliminary request to the ECJ made by the Conseil d’État (France) asked whether article 8ab(5) of Directive 2011/16 (DAC6) infringes the right to an effective remedy by not excluding, in principle, lawyers participating in judicial proceedings from the scope of intermediaries who must supply information or who must notify another intermediary of that obligation; and the rights to privacy and protection of personal data by not excluding lawyers assessing their clients’ legal situation from the scope of intermediaries who must supply information or who must notify another intermediary of that obligation.93

0.3.4. Normal audits

fully applicable just by the commencement of an ex officio assessment.94 However, the introduction of financial institution notices in the United Kingdom departs from the audi alteram partem minimum standard by not requiring court approval before its issuance and the removal of the rights to appeal of affected third parties.95 Also, in Denmark, an obligation to provide transfer pricing documentation for domestic Danish transactions was repealed, as it was deemed disproportionate.96

One exception to this general trend is the development detected regarding non bis in idem, as now less than half the jurisdictions report that the principle applies to tax audits.97

In this regard, the judgment of the National Court (Audiencia Nacional) of Spain dated 3 June 2021 prevents tax authorities from initiating a second assessment on a given tax and period.98 Regarding audi alteram partem, also in Spain, the Supreme Court prevented tax authorities as well from extending the scope of an audit without previously notifying the taxpayer.

Regarding the content and structure of tax audits, in Chile, the tax authorities extensively regulated the actions of the tax authorities in the context of tax assessments aiming to better protect taxpayers’ rights, through SII Letters Nos. 12 and 41.99

In addition, 2021 was a year in which extensions of deadlines were necessary for the taxpayers’ sake to meet their reporting and compliance obligations, and, at the same time, this development also challenged what is to be understood as a “reasonable” time limit on the side of the tax administration.

For its part, it is encouraging that, according to Chart 28 in section 4.4., the use of independent expert reports in the framework of audits has grown exponentially since 2018, when only 70% of the surveyed countries allowed them.100 Keeping with the rising trend, 92% of the surveyed countries allowed said reports in 2021.

97 See sec. 4. for further details on the specific principles and their development.

99 See secs. 1.4., 1.5., 1.6., 3.8. and 4.1. See also CL: OPTR Report (Taxpayers/Tax Practitioners/Tax Administration), Questionnaire 2, Question 30.

For the more intensive audits, the previously reported shift away from the fundamental principles has also been improved somewhat, but, overall, the improvement is not significant.

0.3.5. More extensive audits

As mentioned initially, in the area of more extensive audits in which the tax authorities have strictly limited powers, no appreciable difference to the level of compliance with minimum standards and best practices was detected in 2021. One of the few positive developments reported in this area comes from the Supreme Court of Spain, which stated in a judgment of 14 July 2021 that the tax administration cannot conduct investigations, determine settlements or impose sanctions on a taxpayer based on documents or evidence seized as a result of a search carried out in the home of third parties when such documents were considered invalid in a final criminal judgment because they were obtained in violation of fundamental rights, even if the entry and registration had been authorized by a judge. In addition, another Supreme Court judgment, this time of 23 September 2021, stated that the tax authorities cannot enter premises without first notifying the beginning of an audit procedure.101 Shifting away from the minimum standards and best practices, the State Court of Appeals of Minas Gerais, Brazil, found a prior authorization by the judiciary to enter premises (an accounting office) unnecessary, since such an activity would represent – in the view of the court – a mere exercise of the police power by tax authorities.102 On the other hand, in the United States, the judiciary authorized the IRS to issue summonses requiring multiple couriers and financial institutions to submit information about US taxpayers who may have used the services of Panama Offshore Legal Services (POLS) and its associates to evade US federal income taxes.103 Also shifting from the minimum standard, new legislation in Mexico allows the tax authorities to seize bank deposits without prior judicial hearing when a tax assessment has become "due".104

0.3.6. Reviews and appeals

The positive developments regarding digitalization of the communication between tax administrations and taxpayers has further prompted e-filing of tax returns and other reports and electronic filing of reviews of incorrect tax assessments, speeding up the correction of tax assessments. For example, Colombia went for full digitalization of all tax proceedings (e.g.

electronic notifications, obligations to email lawsuits to defendants, digital notifications, virtual hearings and electronic files) in 2021.\textsuperscript{105} This positive improvement dovetails with a generally positive development in the area of reviews and appeals, where the previous trend towards limiting access to justice by requiring the prior exhaustion of administrative review before bringing a case to court seems to have been brought to a halt, with now slightly less than half the jurisdictions reporting that this is necessary.\textsuperscript{106}

The COVID-19 outbreak brought, as pointed out in section 0.2., improvements that also comprised dispute resolution. As an example, the specific measures introduced during the pandemic in Lithuania have been reported to encourage faster dispute resolution, i.e. remote hearings, more efficient written procedures and wider use of electronic means, although exceptional cases may still exceed 2 years.\textsuperscript{107} The OECD reports that the Georgia Revenue Service introduced remote, electronic tax dispute hearings in which taxpayers were offered the chance to have a remote hearing for their ongoing disputes.\textsuperscript{108}

In Chile, the general amendments to the tax code included the creation of the tax ombudsman office, the Defensoría del Contribuyente (DEDECON), to assist taxpayers and provide legal assistance.\textsuperscript{109} In Lithuania, a legal services information system (TEISIS) has provided residents with interactive consultations and electronic services of state-guaranteed legal aid.\textsuperscript{110}

\textbf{0.3.7. Criminal and administrative sanctions}

In 2021, punitive tax law continued to expand its natural boundaries, extending the applicable punitive tax liabilities to both taxpayers and third parties because of the supremacy of public \textsuperscript{106} See Chart 43 and sec. 6.1.

\textsuperscript{107} See LT: Law on Tax Administration, 2005, available at https://le-seimas.lrs.lt/portal/legalAct/lt/TAD/TAIS.276549?jfwid=q88fl3sArticle (accessed 7 Mar. 2022). The reported statements are based mostly on practical experience. The pandemic encouraged tax authorities to use other opportunities in practice, which turned out to be more efficient, as reported. See also LT: OPTR Report (Taxpayers / Tax Practitioners, Law Firm) Questionnaire 2, Question 51.

\textsuperscript{110} See the TEISIS website, https://teisis.lt/external/home/main (accessed 24 Feb. 2022). See also LT: OPTR Report (Taxpayers / Tax Practitioners), Questionnaire 2, Question 54 interest and the efficiency of tax collection.\textsuperscript{111} In that period, the number of tax penalties increased significantly, sometimes at the expense of proportionality. This has coincided with a concurrence in criminal and administrative sanctions.

A very good example is the case of Chinese Taipei, which instituted a significant increase in fines for tax evasion, both for authorship and abetting. Contrary to previous legislation, the amendment in question no longer allows corporate employees to avoid imprisonment by paying the fine.\textsuperscript{112}

The Administrative Court in Blagoevgrad, Bulgaria (Administrativen sad Blagoevgrad), asked the ECJ for a preliminary ruling on whether the sealing of business premises together with an administrative penalty is proportionate for failing to issue an invoice, an interesting case that merits follow-up.\textsuperscript{113}

However, some developments served to counteract this expansionary trend. Among other developments, Brazil upheld the non bis in idem principle against the tax administration’s attempt to punish concurrently the non-payment of monthly advance payments and the final corporate tax debt,\textsuperscript{114} and Portugal incorporated a rule into its legislation according to which potential tax penalties are automatically waived if in the preceding 5 years the taxpayer has neither been convicted of any tax infraction nor availed of a reduction or waiver of tax penalties.\textsuperscript{115}

Overall, 2021 was also characterized by criminal prosecutions and penalties imposed for tax offences. A major case broke in Italy, where the Guardia di Finanza (Financial Police) accused a multinational online travel company based in the Netherlands of evading payment of EUR 153 million in VAT between 2013 and 2019 by issuing invoices without VAT, due to the application of the so-called reverse-charge mechanism, although its counterpart (the accommodation provider) was not registered, so the tax was neither declared nor paid in Italy.

The multinational considers that the assessment and payment of all relevant taxes are the responsibility of third parties, namely, their domestic intermediaries.\(^\text{116}\)

Several cases were prosecuted and decided in the United States.\(^\text{117}\) In that country, several courts held proportionate the application of the 50% maximum penalty against taxpayers for wilful failure to file a timely FBAR, since this represents a careless disregard of a known or obvious risk, as well as a violation of a known legal duty.\(^\text{118}\)

In addition, 2021 saw new organizational structures for the investigation of tax offences. An interesting example of this is the use of information gathered on the basis of whistle-blower disclosures, which was also the topic in the Halet v. Luxembourg case before the ECtHR, in which the court weighed the disclosure of documents that were subject to professional secrecy\(^\text{119}\) against the general interest and the principle of proportionality.\(^\text{120}\)

0.3.8. Enforcement of taxes

As part of the trend that interim measures introduced during a time of crisis have proven useful for the continuous protection of taxpayers’ rights, it is noteworthy to observe how states have dealt with the immediate threat to the financial foundation of their societies during the pandemic. Extending way beyond 2020 and in to 2021, the lingering financial crisis has threatened bankruptcy for many taxpayers, and in response states have introduced several interim measures in line with the best practice. For example, in Denmark, a taxpayer to whom a temporary payment of COVID-19 support has been paid out can choose the year of taxation that support. The choice is between the year of payment and a later year; however, the support must be taxed no later than the year in which the recipient obtained an administrative decision awarding him the final right to the amount.\(^\text{121}\)

the suspension period.\textsuperscript{122} In Lithuania, companies affected by the pandemic and listed by the tax authorities may form interest-free loan agreements until 31 August 2021 for debts that have been comprised for the period from 16 March 2020 to 31 August 2021. Companies shall pay the loans in instalments until 31 December 2022, among other measures.\textsuperscript{123}

While taxpayer bankruptcy and insolvency are a natural part of any society, it is worth considering whether some of the innovative features should be made permanent, for example to limit the state’s power and ensure the taxpayer a right to a dignified existence, defined as the minimum necessary for living. As these measures deal directly with the effective collection of taxes, it should be noted that they come with a price as well. Among other measures, Austria reduced its basic personal income tax rate for certain portions of income, resulting in a relief of up to EUR 1.6 billion per year for wage and income taxpayers.\textsuperscript{124} Canada extended the temporary amendments to the Income Tax Regulations applicable to registered pension plans and deferred salary leave plans from 2021 through 2022.\textsuperscript{125} In the United States, the Coronavirus Aid, Relief, and Economic Security Act (CARES Act), enacted on 27 March 2020, established the Paycheck Protection Program (PPP) to provide forgivable loans of up to USD 10 million to small businesses.\textsuperscript{126}

Another example is the United Kingdom, which has been reported to show a lot of leeway in agreeing to postponement of liability and in approving time-to-pay arrangements during the pandemic, which reportedly increased the levels of tax debt greatly during the pandemic to a peak of GBP 67 billion in August 2020, largely because of HMRC’s decision to suspend collection of VAT and income tax self-assessment debts at the outset.\textsuperscript{127} On the other hand, the price of depriving taxpayers of their livelihood and a dignified existence may come with a cost as well. On that note, a controversy has been raging in Spain over the possibility, accepted by the Supreme Court in a 2019 ruling, of the tax administration seizing the minimum wage collected in previous months if it has not been used up in full and if it is being saved little by little in the account of the taxpayer.128

0.3.9. Cross-border procedures

A continuous and general trend that has extended into 2021 is the increase in cross-border procedures between states and the accompanying weakening of taxpayers’ rights in the process. Rules on mandatory disclosure and exchange of information are being continuously introduced in order to better equip tax administrations, at the same time weakening the protection of taxpayers. In the European Union, the most important example is DAC7, which expands the automatic exchange of information and reporting obligations to cover certain transactions through digital platforms and modifies existing regulations with the aim of improving administrative cooperation in exchange of information as regards, for instance, joint audits, information requests and data breaches.129 A similar development has occurred in the United States, where newly adopted regulations clarify sales and use tax collection and reporting responsibilities of marketplace facilitators on behalf of online sellers as required by state law.130

Positive developments for taxpayers’ rights in cross-border situations in recent years include the widespread ratification of the MLI and its introduction of MAP and mandatory binding arbitration. In the same vein, the EU Tax Dispute Resolution Mechanisms also provide better taxpayer protection in this regard at the EU level.

Another interesting development is the Federal Court of Canada’s decision in Blue Bridge Trust Company Inc v. Minister of National Revenue. While endorsing the need for judicial review of the request for information, the court pointed out that the requested authority had to assume that the request for information complied with the domestic law of the requesting state and was necessary for the purposes of the investigation based on mutual trust between the parties to a double tax convention.132

In Denmark, the National Tax Tribunal decided an appeal on access to cover letters, emails and other documents initiating the procedure between the Danish competent authority and the 129 See Morales, supra n. 38. See also sec. 9.

Luxembourg competent authority. The court upheld the exemption of said documents from access to information based on the protection of confidentiality.133

The prohibition of the exchange of illegally obtained information received a boost in China (People’s Rep.), where the newly reformed Personal Information Protection Law moved towards the best practice, since it is clear that no organization or individual may unlawfully provide personal information of others.134

On the other hand, Mexico maintained the tax administration’s collection powers in force despite a taxpayer’s request to initiate a MAP procedure in a way practically identical to solve et repete and essentially rendering the MAP ineffective.135

0.3.10. Legislation

No matter how limited the time and resources available to tax administrations, taxes must be based on a legal source, which results from the will of the people in a democratic state. For this to happen in practice, taxpayers should ideally be involved in shaping legislation via adequate public consultation. Some positive developments were reported in this area in 2021, with a significant growth in public consultation for tax matters.

Perhaps as a consequence of the “hardening” of soft law and the progressive intervention of multilateral bodies in the legislative processes in tax matters, and probably in response to doubts about the democratic legitimacy of the rule-making processes carried out by such bodies, 2021 saw a growing trend towards public consultation. This is particularly notable with respect to the European Commission, where the European Commission confirmed a steady (and growing) movement towards greater citizen participation in EU regulatory processes in general, including one major consultation on taxpayers’ rights.136 In this regard, the Commission follows in the footsteps of the OECD, which maintained in 2021 its policy of public consultation on a number of its proposals, in particular those related to the digitalization of the economy. In addition, the European Commission launched 17 other public consultation initiatives in 2021, confirming the trend.137

137 See European Commission: Have Your Say (Published Initiatives), available at https://ec.europa.eu/info/law/better-regulation/have-your-
A particularly positive example comes by way of Luxembourg, where the Constitutional Court ruled that economic retroactivity of a tax provision is unconstitutional, as the principle of legal certainty precludes norms from being applied retroactively, and that the principle and its expressions of protection of legitimate expectations and the non-retroactivity of laws are general legal principles that are linked to the constitutional principle of the rule of law. This development is somewhat at odds with the hesitant response of the ECtHR in the Vegotex case, referred to the Grand Chamber on 8 March 2021, which allowed the retrospective application of new legislation to prevent a tax credit attributable to the taxpayer from becoming time-barred, allegedly driven by a compelling reason of a general interest.

For its part, in India, the Supreme Court found “ludicrous” the tax authorities’ attempt to apply an expanded 2012 definition of software royalty to events occurring since 1 June 1976, in parallel with a statement from the Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi expressly qualifying retrospective tax legislation as “a mistake”. The Indian Parliament enacted legislation scrapping the retroactive 2012 Amendment, however, only limited to income arising from the transfer of a capital asset situate in India in consequence of the transfer of a share or interest in a company or entity registered or incorporated outside India made before the 28th day of May, 2012. Further, any order or notice made under that Amendment shall be deemed to never have been passed.

0.3.11. Revenue practice and guidance

Regarding tax legislation, it is pivotal that taxpayers not merely comprehend the rules but that they are also aware of them once implemented. This awareness, as a cornerstone of legal certainty, has been particularly challenging in recent years, with a high number of interim pandemic legislative provisions and a rise in cross-border tax initiatives at the OECD and EU levels. A growth in guidelines regarding corporate taxation issues was reportedly seen in 2021, indicating that tax authorities are aiming to improve certainty and reduce the risk of litigation. A noteworthy example in this regard is a judgment issued by the Netherlands Hoge Raad (Supreme Court), which leans towards the minimum standard. The court protected the taxpayer against an incorrect statement on the website of the Tax and Customs Administration and allowed the taxpayer to rely on information published by the Dutch tax authorities even when it appears to be inaccurate.\textsuperscript{143}

\textbf{0.3.12. Institutional framework for the protection of taxpayers' rights}

Overall, the efficient protection of taxpayers’ rights requires an institutional framework, which can be shaped in several ways, such as a taxpayers’ bill of rights or taxpayers’ charters. A significant improvement among the jurisdictions that have a framework like that occurred in 2021, since more than half of them are now reporting that the provisions are in fact legally effective.\textsuperscript{144}

\textbf{0.4. Methodological remarks}

Following the OPTR’s working standard and procedure, this yearbook has been prepared based on the information provided in 56 reports from 87 national reporters from 47 countries worldwide, distributed regionally as presented in Chart A.

\textbf{Chart A. Surveyed Countries per Region}

Reporters are grouped by country. To the fullest extent possible, these groups of experts are formed by practitioners/taxpayers, tax authorities, academics, tax ombudspersons and the judiciary of each surveyed country in order to obtain a neutral, balanced report on the situation of taxpayers’ rights in each jurisdiction. Individual reporters can have more than one affiliation simultaneously (e.g. tax administration and academia). The judicial, academic and tax ombudsperson members of each country group of experts are considered neutral, whereas the taxpayer, tax practitioner and tax administration members are considered not neutral. The national groups of experts for 2021 are as follows:

In addition, two regional units keep track of the development of the jurisprudence of international courts dealing with taxpayers’ rights, namely (i) for Europe, comprising the case-law of the ECtHR and the ECJ; and (ii) for the Americas, covering the judgments of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (ACtHR). Reporters were asked to provide relevant information in three different ways. First, through Questionnaire 1, reporters should assess assertively (yes/no) the level of practical implementation of legal procedures, safeguards and guarantees associated with taxpayers’ rights in domestic law in 82 situations. The answers are presented throughout this yearbook in pie charts that compile the answers per country.

In cases in which there is more than one report per country, it may be reported that the same country has experienced progress and setbacks in the adoption of a given standard or practice, depending on the different assessments made by the reporters concerned. In those cases, the groups of national reporters were asked to discuss internally their disagreement and, if possible, to align their assessments of a given factual situation. Despite these efforts, agreement was not always possible. In cases of remaining divergences, the different reports from the same country are taken as fractions of the jurisdiction’s report to maintain parity between jurisdictions, so that all countries are equally represented. Specifically, each of the two reports from Brazil, Mexico, Poland and Slovenia will have a value of 0.5, and each of the three reports from Bulgaria and Peru will have a value of 0.33 for Questionnaire 1’s statistical purposes, as presented in the pie charts, so that each of these countries is represented with an equal value vis-à-vis other countries with single reports. All divergent opinions among reporters of the same country have been reported alongside the pie charts.

This formula aims to give all countries equal weight and to split the input of each country among the various reporters. In other words, where more than one team is involved, or a question has sub-questions, there may be decimals in the findings. All decimal results have been rounded off by (i) dropping all decimals when the first decimal is smaller than or equal to 4; (ii) adding 1 to the rounding digit when the first decimal is greater than 5; (iii) dropping all decimals when the first decimal is 5 and the figure is smaller than its counterpart in the statistical analysis; and (iv) adding 1 to the rounding digit when the first decimal is 5 and the

Second, through Questionnaire 2, reporters should assess assertively (shift towards/shift away) the level of compliance with 57 minimum standards and 44 best practices to protect taxpayers’ rights, grouped in 86 benchmarks. The answers are presented throughout this yearbook, in boxes that state the minimum standard or best practice discussed in each specific section. In cases in which there is more than one report per country, it may be reported that the same country has experienced progress and setbacks in the practical adoption of the minimum standard or best practice, depending on the different assessments made by the reporters concerned. In those cases, different reports from the same country have been identified by a number, as they appear in Appendix B of this yearbook.

Third, reporters should provide an impartial, non-judgemental summary of events occurring in 2021 (legislation enacted, administrative rulings, circulars, case law and tax administration practices) that grounds each report’s assessment of the level of compliance in the above-mentioned benchmarks for the practical protection of taxpayers’ rights. The information is presented, editorially selected, throughout this yearbook. Reporters do not always substantiate their evaluations, which makes it methodologically impossible to report the reasons for diverging assessments in the cases of multiple reports for a single country.
1. Identifying Taxpayers, Issuing Tax Returns and Communicating with Taxpayers

1.1. General issues

Since its inception, the OPTR has reported a steady trend towards improving mechanisms for interaction with taxpayers based on the extensive use of digital tools.\footnote{See Observatory on the Protection of Taxpayers’ Rights (OPTR), The IBFD Yearbook on Taxpayers’ Rights 2020, sec. 1 (IBFD 2021), Books IBFD; and Observatory on the Protection of Taxpayers’ Rights (OPTR), The IBFD Yearbook on Taxpayers’ Rights 2019, sec. 1 (IBFD 2020), Books IBFD} The outbreak of the COVID-19 pandemic has exponentially increased the speed of the process: the restrictions on paper-based communication and in-person interactions have led to a greater demand on digital service channels.\footnote{See OECD, supra n. 1, at p. 13}

As will be seen below, the provision of remote digital services by tax administrations and the filing of returns and other information in electronic format has continued its upward trend. The information provided by national reporters openly leans in this direction.

Regarding taxpayer identification, several states surveyed have taken concrete actions to expand the scope of their registration programmes with enhanced security and confidentiality measures for taxpayer data. In this regard, the practice whereby tax and civil registrations of natural persons engaged in the provision of independent services were differentiated for confidentiality reasons is noteworthy. The same applies to secure taxpayer identification practices for access to tax administrations’ online systems, which also received a boost in 2021 (section 1.2).

The situation is stable as regards the protection of the confidentiality of taxpayer information held by third parties. The few developments reported are of a regulatory nature, related to the secure transfer of information to the tax administration and to the confidentiality obligations of persons who have, or have had, access to taxpayer information (section 1.3).

The protection of taxpayers’ right to habeas data has suffered some setbacks, although this does not mean that the general trend towards greater protection has retreated. The possibility to use and correct pre-populated returns has increased in the period, and guidance has been provided in strong fashion. Several countries have expanded the use of pre-populated returns to minor and local taxes. The possibility to obtain certified information on the tax base for estate tax, with appropriate security guarantees, was reported. However, in one case, the concept of “reserved information” was expanded to prevent the taxpayer’s ability to access information relevant to the return. In another case, the judiciary upheld the denial of access to personal information of the taxpayer on public interest grounds (section 1.4).

Following the trend imposed since 2020 by the COVID-19 pandemic, digital and secure communication between tax administrations and taxpayers was given a strong boost in 2021. Measures in this regard have been both regulatory, establishing simplified communication procedures, and operational, implementing technological tools to facilitate communication with taxpayers, although some of these facilities (e-assessments) have been objected to for impeding the proper exercise of the right to defence (section 1.5).

Similarly, the persistence of pandemic conditions has prompted the development of more cooperative compliance programmes among the surveyed countries, as well as actions that favour constructive dialogue and cooperation between tax authorities and taxpayers, even though they may not qualify properly as cooperative compliance programmes, with minimum setbacks (section 1.6).

Similarly, tax administrations have had to expand their taxpayer assistance programmes due to the persistence of the COVID-19 pandemic. Indeed, this activity has underpinned the digitalization of tax administrations in 2021. Multiple developments are reported, aimed at facilitating remote tax compliance and assisting taxpayers with any queries they may have regarding their tax status, including access to information in multiple languages (section 1.7).

In conclusion, based on the information so provided, it can be stated – this yearbook does – that tax administrations have taken taxpayer-centred approaches regarding taxpayer identification, the issuance of tax returns and communication with taxpayers, tending towards compliance with the minimum standards and best practices that the OPTR monitors.147

1.2. Identification of taxpayers

During 2021, most countries maintained the trend towards the implementation of safeguards linked to the issuance of taxpayer identification numbers,148 along the line of developments reported in previous OPTR Yearbooks.

In this regard, Australia changed the myGovID149 identity requirements, enabling taxpayers to achieve a greater online identity strength. Taxpayer access to standard identity strength has been expanded by including Australian citizenship certificates and ImmiCards as accepted identity documents and by verifying an Australian passport, at least one other identity document and a photo. The process includes a one-off face verification process, which entails scanning a taxpayer’s face to check they are a real person, the right person and are verifying in real time.

Bulgaria amended its legislation regarding the identification numbers (BULSTAT numbers) of self-insured persons that practised freelance professions to separate the taxpayer’s identification number from the person’s unique identification number (UIC). The measure aims to protect taxpayers’ privacy, in line with Regulation (EU) 2018/1725, on the protection of natural persons regarding the processing of personal data. Prior to the amendment, the BULSTAT number was the same as the natural person’s unique identification number (UIC), so that a freelance professional’s private UIC became public through the BULSTAT number.

However, as part of the COVID-19 measures, Ghana ordered the replacement of individuals’ tax identification and social security numbers with their Ghanaian national identification card numbers, a development towards a unified citizens’ identification.

In the same vein, as reported in the OPTR 2020 Yearbook, the United States’ Internal Revenue Service (IRS) has extended the scope of its PIN-based identity protection programme (IP PIN) to all those taxpayers able to verify their identity. The online PIN application, Get an IP PIN, secures access through a multi-factor authentication process to verify a person’s identity. In addition, the IRS updated its frequently asked questions (FAQs) on general issues of the Foreign Account Tax Compliance Act (FATCA). The updated FAQs provide information for Model 1 Foreign Financial Institutions (FFIs) that are required to, but have not been able to, obtain and exchange the US taxpayer identification number (TIN) for

For its part, in Japan, taxpayers were prompted to request their individual ID card by their interest in applying for special subsidies for individual businesses damaged by the effects of the COVID-19 pandemic.\textsuperscript{158}

Regarding the legal scope of measures aimed at suspending the registration and identification of taxpayers, the State Tax Service (STS) of Ukraine clarified that the cancellation of VAT registration releases the taxpayer from the obligations linked to the report of taxable transactions, unless such suspension is annulled. Should that be the case, the taxpayer should be retroactively reinstated on the register, without penalties for late filing.\textsuperscript{159}

1.3. Information supplied by third parties and withholding obligations

Minimum standard: Impose obligations of confidentiality on third parties with respect to information gathered by them for tax purposes

Shifted towards/improved the minimum standard: Colombia, Turkey

Shifted away from the minimum standard: Chinese Taipei

Best practice: Where tax is withheld by third parties, the taxpayer should be excluded from liability if the third party fails to pay over the tax

Shifted towards/matched the best practice: Colombia

Shifted away from the best practice: None

There were no significant changes in 2021 to the trend in favour of protecting the confidentiality of taxpayers regarding the information handled by third parties for tax purposes.

In Colombia, a resolution established the conditions for secure transfer of information related to the consolidated industry and services tax, part of the so-called Simple Taxation Regime (Régimen Simple de Tributación, RST), an optional taxation model that replaces the income tax and integrates the national excise tax and the consolidated industry and commerce tax to local tax authorities for control purposes.\textsuperscript{160}

Turkey modified its Tax Procedures Act to require the partners, executives and personnel of the service providers of the revenue administration to keep the confidentiality of the information and secrets they learn about taxpayers during the provision of their services. This obligation continues even after termination of the service provision.\textsuperscript{161}

In Chinese Taipei, the Regulations Governing Electronic Reporting with Respect to the Implementation of Financial Account Information in Tax Matters for Financial Institutions were enacted, enabling the Ministry of Finance to request that financial institutions provide information on reportable financial accounts, without any reference to confidentiality.\textsuperscript{162}

1.4. The right to access (and correct) information held by tax authorities

Minimum standard: Where pre-populated returns are used, these should be sent to taxpayers to correct errors

- Shifted towards/improved the minimum standard: Australia
- Shifted away from the minimum standard: None

Minimum standard: Provide a right of access for taxpayers to personal information held about them, and a right to apply to correct inaccuracies

- Shifted towards/improved the minimum standard: Chile
- Shifted away from the minimum standard: Belgium

Best practice: Publish guidance on taxpayers’ rights to access information and correct inaccuracies

- Shifted towards/matched the best practice: Chile, United States
- Shifted away from the best practice: Guatemala

Regarding pre-populated returns, the Australian Taxation Office (ATO) expanded the data available in its pre-fill service to include reminders to taxpayers who earn foreign income and increased reminders to those who invest in cryptocurrency. The ATO also ensured the pre-fill service was able to provide JobSeeker amounts to simplify the return process and increase accuracy of individual income tax returns being lodged.\(^{163}\)

However, in Belgium, the tax authorities refused the request made by a Luxembourg fiduciary (an individual) requesting information, access, rectification and restriction of processing of personal information held about her. In a decision of 4 June 2021 (66/2021), the Belgian Data Protection Authority ruled that the Belgian tax authorities had to comply with the request for information, access and rectification, and that the Belgian tax authorities could not reject the request merely by referring to the exceptional ground provided for by law allowing a restriction of the rights of interested parties when this is strictly necessary to safeguard the tax interests of the state. However, the Belgian tax authorities appealed against this decision. The Marktenhof overturned the decision of the Data Protection Authority, ruling that it didn’t consider the tax authority’s mission of protecting the general interest, through its decision 2021/AR/1044 of 1 December 2021. According to the court, the Luxembourg fiduciary abused her right of complaint (misusing it for a purpose other than that for which it is intended) and the Belgian tax authorities were not obligated to comply with the request.¹⁶⁴

Kazakhstan started sending pre-filled tax returns for vehicle tax to taxpayers.¹⁶⁵

On guidance to taxpayers on their right to access information, Chile’s Servicio de Impuestos Internos (SII) issued Letter 12/2021, in which the tax administration is instructed on the procedures to be followed to safeguard taxpayers’ rights, appearance and notifications for tax administrative and judicial procedures established by Law 21.210, which modernizes the tax legislation of that country.

With regard to taxpayers’ access to information held by the tax administration and the possibility of correcting inaccuracies, the letter expressly regulates the following rights: (i) to obtain (electronic) copies of documents; (ii) to be exempted from providing documents that do not correspond to the procedure or that are already with the service; (iii) to obtain, once the relevant procedure is completed, the return of the original documents provided; (iv) to be informed of all kinds of annotations in the file made by the service; (v) to carry out the necessary rectifications, except in the cases established by law and without prejudice to the corresponding penalties under the law; and (vi) to obtain the necessary corrections, except in the cases established by law and without prejudice to the penalties that may apply in accordance with the law.¹⁶⁶

In Chinese Taipei, taxpayers can apply online to receive information on financial estate lists of the decedent for estate tax purposes from 1 September 2021. The information is downloadable with a Citizen Digital Certificate or an electronic certificate approved by the Ministry of Finance by visiting the Financial Estate Electronic Data Filing Service section of The e-Filing and Tax Payment Service of the Ministry of Finance. The data download period is 90 days. The information is also retrievable via mail.¹⁶⁷

In addition, the United States’ IRS made additional (though still limited) information available through taxpayer online accounts and through online tools.\textsuperscript{168}

However, Guatemala reports a setback: the \textit{Servicio de Administración Tributaria} (SAT) Regulation SAT-DSI-1337-2021 limits the access to information on the part of taxpayers by broadening the concept of “reserved information” to documents used within audits and internal rulings of the tax administration.\textsuperscript{169}

1.5. Communication with taxpayers

Chart 3. Is it possible in your country for taxpayers to communicate electronically with the tax authority?

56 responses

- Yes: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil (1), Brazil (2), Bulgaria (1), Bulgaria (2), Bulgaria (3), Chile, China (People’s Rep.), Chinese Taipei, Colombia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Greece, Guatemala, Honduras, India, Italy, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Mauritius, Mexico (1), Mexico (2), Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Peru (1), Peru (2), Peru (3), Poland (1), Poland (2), Portugal, Russia, Serbia, Slovenia (1), Slovenia (2), South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela

- No: Japan

Source: OPTR: Questionnaire 1, Question 3.

The trend towards implementing and improving systems to prevent impersonation or interception of e-communications with taxpayers was maintained in 2021.

Belgium enacted Bill 1697/001, on the dematerialization of the relations between the Belgian Federal Public Service Finance, citizens, legal persons and certain third parties, fostering safe and reliable electronic communication with tax authorities as a rule. The communication between the tax authorities and citizens takes place via an “eBox”, i.e. an electronic mailbox that allows users to exchange electronic messages. To ensure security, communication takes place via authentication mechanisms as defined by Regulation (EU) 910/2014. These mechanisms are provided by the CSAM Platform, the central login point for all online services provided by the government, and are designed to ensure maximum protection of the user’s identity and data. When registering with the eBox via this platform, citizens can choose between several secured digital keys to identify themselves.

In Chile, Letter 12/2021, mentioned several times in this yearbook, improved the tax authorities’ approach to technical assistance to taxpayers. The letter pays particular attention to the electronic communication of tax proceedings, especially through the so-called help desks (mesas de ayuda), the safekeeping of information relating to taxpayer emails, the formalities of electronic notifications of administrative acts, so as to avoid forgeries, and consultations of the taxpayer’s tax situation through the website or the “MiSii” app.\textsuperscript{173}

In addition, the OECD reports the Remote Support and Tax Control in Chile, which provides a way of interacting with taxpayers using a remote service model, i.e. any help or support to taxpayers in resolving tax differences, as well as tax inspection and control, are accomplished remotely, without requiring taxpayers to be present at a tax administration office. With the participation of more officials, Chile aimed for 80% of their actions to be remote by the end of 2021, and by 2022, they aim to reach 95% coverage. Other benefits include reduced commuting and waiting times for taxpayers, avoiding duplicated requests from taxpayers and providing taxpayers with more flexible hours to engage with the tax administration.\textsuperscript{174}

The OECD also reports the numerous online services put in place by China (People’s Rep.) to engage with taxpayers, enhanced using QR codes which link to updated measures and policies undertaken to tackle COVID-19, and the investments of Portugal in improving taxpayer assistance channels. These include so-called secure e-front office assistance, a virtual assistant to record missed calls and subsequent contact by the tax authorities, chats for clarifying questions through digital platforms and the creation of social media channels of the tax administration.\textsuperscript{175}

Another OECD report notes the development of the so-called Administración Digital Integral (Integral Digital Administration (ADI)) in Spain. The Agencia Estatal de Administración Tributaria (AEAT) describes it as its virtual counter to provide customized and remote information and assistance services on a 24/7 basis. It offers a wide range of information and assistance, from the resolution of general queries to information on specific taxpayer files, as well as assistance in complying with tax obligations and the preparation and submission of tax returns. ADI is a multichannel service incorporating many of the different communication tools that modern technology offers (e.g. virtual assistants, instant chats, video-calls and a click-to-call button on the website), integrated into the rest of the AEAT functionalities and procedures.\textsuperscript{176}

As reported in the OPTR 2020 Yearbook,\textsuperscript{177} India introduced faceless e-assessment for assessment and appellate proceedings before the Commissioner of Income Tax Appeals, with inbuilt checks and balances to prevent impersonation or interception. However, it has been reported elsewhere that the exceptional circumstances imposed by the current COVID-19 pandemic have exacerbated concerns regarding whether taxpayers have received adequate opportunity to present their case. Courts have ruled in several cases in this regard: lack of opportunity for a personal hearing; lack of sufficient time to present the defence; and failure to consider exceptional circumstances (such as COVID-19 contagion) resulting in the inability to present pleadings, among others. Courts have quashed faceless assessment orders where opportunity for personal hearing was not granted. Indian courts have consistently held that the right to be heard is an essential feature of any adjudication, however, this does not restrict itself to oral hearings. The Supreme Court had noted earlier in EN Eswariya Iyer v. Registrar, Supreme Court (1980) 4 SCC 680 that where oral persuasiveness is necessary it is unfair to exclude it and therefore, arbitrary too. But where oral presentation is not that essential, its exclusion is not obnoxious.

Honduras’ Servicio de Administración de Rentas (SAR) implemented an Integrated Information System (Sistema de Información Integrado) with many features allowing secure electronic communication with taxpayers, including identification and validation requirements. The system also includes an app (AppSAR 3.0) which enables taxpayers to communicate with the tax authorities through their mobile phones.

In Slovenia, several pieces of general (not just tax-related) legislation have been adopted since 2020 reducing formalities in the communication between taxpayers and the tax authorities due to the COVID-19 outbreak. In this regard, the requirement of an e-signature for several procedures is reported to be waived. The online and mobile system eDavki (eTaxes) has been reported to be an effective information tool that enabled paperless procedures even before the pandemic. Amendments to the Financial Administration and Tax Procedure laws are currently being discussed to deepen the scope of these measures.

In the United States, the IRS launched the Secure Access Digital Identity (SADI) platform, which meets updated digital identity guidelines. Electronic communication with the tax authority remains limited but is improving. The IRS continued supporting online tools related to economic stimulus payments and launched tools related to the child tax credit. However, the utility of IRS online tools is limited, and they are not integrated with each other. The IRS piloted a secure messaging system for taxpayer communications, but its digital communication tools are limited and not easy for taxpayers to use.\footnote{See 2021 NTA ARC, supra n. 166, at pp. 117 and 122-135. Cooperative compliance remained on the rise in 2021, partly driven by the continuation of the COVID-19 pandemic.\footnote{See OPTR, supra n. 99 (2019), at sec. 1.6.; and OPTR, supra n. 143 (2020), at sec. 1.6.}

In Chile, Letter 12/2021, mentioned several times in this yearbook,\footnote{See secs. 1.4., 1.5., and 2.} ordered tax authorities to use all available means to facilitate tax compliance without unnecessary delay, demand or waiting. To do so, tax authorities should proceed in the least costly way for the taxpayer, certified by the official in charge, upon receipt of all the information requested and insofar as it does not imply non-compliance with tax provisions. The letter also develops in detail the administrative action linked to the ex officio review of tax proceedings and voluntary administrative reversal, namely the Revisión de la Actuación Fiscalizadora (RAV) and the Reposición Administrativa Voluntaria (RAV).186

In addition, it has been reported that the tax authorities in Honduras are in the process of approving an internal guide on the implementation of a cooperative compliance programme for “large” taxpayers, as part of the cooperative compliance pilot project with the Vienna University of Economics and Business (WU). This process leaves open the possibility for any large taxpayer to enter the programme.187

For its part, the tax authorities of Italy have issued clarifications on their cooperative compliance programme, focusing on the management of the constant, preventive dialogue required between the tax authorities and qualifying taxpayers in order to correctly identify and assess potential tax risks and increase legal certainty.188

In Mexico, the mandatory registration of natural persons of legal age (18 years old) in the Federal Taxpayers' Register (Registro Federal de Contribuyentes) without punishment for non-compliance has been regarded as a measure to encourage cooperative compliance.\(^{189}\)

Likewise, the Tax Code Act of Poland was amended by adding the so-called Interpretation 590. It allows the Minister of Finance to conclude an agreement with anyone who plans or has started an investment in the country of at least PLN 50 million (approximately EUR 12 million) on the tax consequences of an investment planned or initiated in the country. The investment agreements aim to provide investors with certainty and ensure a uniform and consistent interpretation of tax provisions. The agreement may include, inter alia, (i) an assessment that the transfer price of the controlled transaction is set on terms that would be agreed between unrelated entities; (ii) an assessment that the investment does not constitute a tax scheme; and (iii) an understanding on the interpretation of tax law.\(^{190}\)

In Russia, new legislation has softened the conditions for the application of the cooperative compliance programme, named “tax monitoring”, so that more taxpayers may participate. The threshold for participating in the programme has been reduced to RUB 100 million (approximately EUR 1.152 million). The income and asset thresholds have also been reduced to RUB 1 billion (approximately EUR 11.52 million).\(^{191}\)

In the United Kingdom, an extra support service is made regularly available to those with particular difficulties in handling their tax affairs.\(^{192}\)

As has been the case since the beginning of the COVID-19 pandemic, the trend of increasing tax compliance assistance services for persons with special needs, particularly through electronic means, continued in 2021.

The OECD devotes a whole chapter of its 2021 report Building Tax Culture, Compliance and Citizenship: A Global Source Book on Taxpayer Education to providing details on many initiatives put in place by tax administrations to assist taxpayers with familiarizing themselves with and using digital tools and services they have developed. Further, it looks at programmes meant to directly assist taxpayers who face difficulties in fulfilling their tax obligations or in receiving benefits and credits to which they are entitled.

In this regard, the report states, with the support of data, that several administrations provide free tax services for lower income individuals and newly created businesses. For taxpayers with disabilities, the vast majority of tax administrations surveyed by the OECD report having in place special provisions, as has also been reported by the OPTR in previous yearbooks. Among others, the OECD report highlights as examples the dispute assistance and tax consultancy services from Australia and Tanzania, the mobile tax service centres of South Africa and Georgia, the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance (VITA) and the Tax Counseling for the Elderly (TCE) programmes of the United States, the face-to-face workshops and seminars of Sweden, the Business Support Units of Malaysia, the Special Taxpayer Assistance Programme (STAP) to assist micro and small businesses in completing their income tax returns of Jamaica and the Community Volunteer Income Tax Program of Canada.198

When it comes to 2021 developments, in Australia, the ATO Tax Help Program, an initiative that assists eligible taxpayers in lodging or amending returns from July to October of each year, was extended to the end of November in 2021 to further assist those impacted by the COVID-19 pandemic. Assistance through this program was available face-to-face, over the phone or online. Also, there are reports of enhancement of the ATO’s telephony capacity by introducing a work from home (WFH)/work from office (WFO) toggle, whereby staff only need one click to let the system know they are working from home and to deliver calls through their smartphone to their headset, allowing the workforce to rapidly return to work from home or return to the office arrangements without an impact on their duties.199

In Belgium, the law on the dematerialization of relations between the tax authorities, citizens, legal persons and certain third parties, mentioned previously in this yearbook,200 allows individuals to benefit from an “opt-in system”, according to which they can keep on communicating with the tax administration on paper alone, unless they have expressly chosen to communicate by electronic means. However, professionals and legal persons are obliged to communicate electronically with the tax administration, even in cases in which they act on behalf of an individual.201

Likewise, the tax authorities in Chile have improved their digital platforms and assistance to taxpayers, as reported in a document issued by the Taxpayer Assistance Department of the SII.202

In addition, Colombia resumed face-to-face assistance to taxpayers to help them comply with their obligations, along with 385,434 video appointments through its scheduling system as of August 2021, providing assistance to 347,869 individual taxpayers in 388,518 transactions nationwide. Moreover, the Dirección de Impuestos y Aduanas Nacionales (DIAN) established a national network of 35 “virtual self-management kiosks” in shopping centres, chambers of commerce and universities, places where DIAN does not have a presence through its formal contact points. During the last year, 95,434 taxpayers and more than 175,000 transactions were handled through this new channel. Furthermore, a cognitive virtual assistant was developed, along with a chatbot and an app.203

For its part, Spain’s, Recovery Plan, approved on 27 April 2021, aims to increase assistance to taxpayers and enhance cooperative compliance.204

On the other hand, the challenges to the fulfillment of this standard due to the outbreak of COVID-19 seem not to have ceased.

It has been reported that in Guatemala, most of the assistance for compliance was given electronically, despite the large number of remote areas without access to the Internet.205

In addition, most of the assistance for compliance was also provided online in Honduras. Furthermore, Mobile Tax Offices in remote areas were not available throughout 2021, although tax officials stated to the press that taxpayers prefer electronic returns and communications with the tax administration.206

Peru improved its assistance and orientation service in sign language for people with hearing disabilities by expanding the premises in which this service is provided. Also, the Superintendencia Nacional de Aduanas y de Administración Tributaria (SUNAT) has enabled a virtual assistant named SOFIA, an acronym that stands for Servicio de Orientación y Facilitación de Información Automatizada (Automated Information Facilitation and Guidance Service). Furthermore, SUNAT has officials who can provide information in the Quechua language in 11 of the country’s regions. Finally, exceptions for compliance have been provided for taxpayers in remote areas with low Internet connectivity: regulations detail which areas qualify as having “low or no Internet connectivity”, allowing taxpayers located in those areas to use paper receipts exceptionally. Several subsequent regulations from 2021 use the same annexes to determine who is not required to use the new electronic mechanisms established as mandatory for the rest of the taxpayers.207

206 See GT: SAT Press Release, El 90 % de contribuyentes del SAR presentaron sus declaraciones de forma electrónica (15 Feb. 2021), available at https://proceso hn/el-90-de-contribuyentes-del-sar-presentaron-sus-declaraciones-de-forma-electronica/ (accessed 24 Jan. 2022). In this regard, the OECD data shows that taxpayer uptake of digital contact channels (online, email and digital assistance) is increasing, while usage of traditional channels (telephone, in-person and paper) continues to decrease. See OECD, supra n. 190, at Table 5.1. See also HN: OPTR Report (Tax Administration), Questionnaire 2, Question 8.

In the United States, while IRS offices and phone lines reopened, backlogs and social distancing requirements, combined with increased taxpayer assistance requests, caused low levels of service, which adversely impacted taxpayers. In-person help remained reduced, with many Taxpayer Assistance Centers going unstaffed for extended periods. Free tax preparation help was limited during the 2021 filing season, with some non-profit sites closed and others only offering online or drop-off service.\textsuperscript{208}

In response to these events in the United States, the IRS partnered with professional and community organizations in efforts to help people claim stimulus payments and the advanced child tax credit.\textsuperscript{209} Also, the IRS publicized resources for visually impaired taxpayers and developed Form 9000, which taxpayers may use to elect post-filing notices in alternate formats beginning 31 January 2022.\textsuperscript{210}

In addition, the IRS continued to make progress on language access via Form 1040 (Schedule LP), a request for the taxpayer to indicate language preferences; however, it is not yet issuing translated notices to taxpayers based on those preferences.\textsuperscript{211} Form 1040 was provided in Spanish for the first time for tax year 2020, and telephone interpretation was expanded to the main customer service line.\textsuperscript{212}

2. The Issue of Tax Assessment

\textbf{Best practice:} Establish a constructive dialogue between taxpayers and revenue authorities to ensure a fair assessment of taxes based on the equality of arms

\textbf{Shifted towards/matched the best practice:} Chile, Guatemala, Switzerland, Russia

\textbf{Shifted away from the best practice:} United States

Steps were taken in 2021 to build a constructive dialogue between taxpayers and tax authorities, maintaining the trend towards the fulfilment of the best practice.

In Chile, Letter 12/2021, mentioned several times in this yearbook, regulated new tax dispute settlement mechanisms, namely the Revisión de la Actuación Fiscalizadora (RAV) and the Reposición Administrativa Voluntaria (RAV). The ultimate aim is to establish an independent review body that is able to settle disputes swiftly in a context of collaboration and mutual trust, which would provide legal certainty to the taxpayer on the one hand and, on the other hand, ensure tax compliance and safeguard the interest of the revenue.214

Costa Rica adopted a new procedure allowing taxpayers to request advanced pricing agreements (APAs).215

In Guatemala, it has been reported that the tax administration has made efforts to approach different tax organizations, such as the International Fiscal Association (IFA), to establish a dialogue about tax matters and to find common ground regarding tax law interpretation.216

Switzerland approved a new code of conduct between taxpayers and tax authorities, which aims to sustainably strengthen the “historically growing” relationship of respect and trust between taxpayers, tax representatives and tax administrations.217

In Ukraine, the reduction of the impact of COVID-19 has enabled the tax authorities to propose the resuming of certain audits, previously suspended because of the pandemic.\(^{218}\)

In Russia, the Supreme Court Commercial Disputes Chamber decision of 15 December 2021 in the Spetskhimprom case limits the possibility to attribute responsibility for the negligent purchaser as an accessory to tax fraud to the actual amount of the prejudice caused to the revenue as determined through a fair tax assessment, based on the equality of arms and determined on the basis of all relevant circumstances of which the tax authority has become aware through the taxpayer or other sources. According to the decision, tax authorities are not exempt from the obligation, within the framework of tax audits, to take exhaustive measures aimed at establishing the actual amount of the taxpayer’s tax liability, which would rule out the possibility of imputing tax in an amount higher than that established by law. Countering tax abuse should not lead to the imposition of tax exceeding the treasury’s loss from non-payment of taxes at any stage of the taxpayer’s supply chain. Otherwise, a penalty would have been imposed that goes beyond the measures necessary to ensure the universality and equality of taxation.\(^{219}\)

For its part, pandemic-related service reductions are reported to have led to a shift away from the best practice in the United States for the second year in a row. The IRS continued to prematurely assess and collect taxes in some cases, due to correspondence processing delays and a backlog in Tax Court petitions.\(^{220}\) In spite of this, the IRS manually processed millions of returns with issues relating to pandemic relief legislation, including over 11 million delays and a backlog in Tax Court petitions. For the second year in a row, the IRS continued to speed up assessments and the correction of errors, particularly systematic errors, led to a shift away from the best practice: Use e-filing to speed up assessments and the correction of errors, particularly systematic errors

United Kingdom

The trend towards the use of e-filing to speed up assessments was also on the rise in 2021. Among several developments, in Australia, the ATO extended the use of real-time messaging for those using online services to lodge activity statements, prompting them to self-correct and prevent inadvertent errors prior to lodgement.222

The BES Islands offered e-filing of 2020 individual income tax returns.223 Burkina Faso implemented an electronic tax return via an operational platform named e-liasse, as well as electronic payment of motor vehicle tax via mobile phones.224 Bolivia enacted rules for registration and e-filing of wealth tax.225 Egypt, Ivory Coast and Rwanda implemented, and Serbia further regulated, e-invoicing system procedures.226

In Colombia, the DIAN established the requirements for allowing the circulation of electronic invoices as negotiable titles through registration in the electronic registry for e-invoices (RADIAN) and provided detailed rules on the electronic payroll system that taxpayers must implement to support the deduction of payroll expenses for income tax and VAT credit purposes, when applicable.227

In addition, Chile developed the so-called carpeta tributaria electrónica (electronic tax folder), aiming for an improvement of the digital platforms of the Chilean tax authorities due to COVID-19.228 Ecuador enacted transitory measures for buyers to explicitly accept (or deny) electronic commercial invoices addressed to them, while tax authorities internally developed an automatic system that allows buyers to accept (or deny) commercial e-invoices.229 Guatemala developed and fostered the use of Declaraguate, an electronic portal through which the tax authorities conduct almost all procedures, and encouraged the use of e-filing to speed up tax compliance. For its part, Paraguay developed a system for the e-registration of purchases and sales vouchers, and Peru launched a pre-populated virtual advanced VAT form based on the information obtained from electronic receipts, aiming to reduce human errors and speed up assessments.

The government of Bulgaria has proposed an amendment to the VAT Act to extend the scope of devices through which fiscal receipts can be issued. In addition to cash registers, the VAT Act would also include other printing devices with distance (software) fiscalization, and Sweden implemented the MOSS e-service for declaring and paying VAT from the selling of digital services to non-taxable persons within the European Union. Ireland introduced e-reporting for certain share incentive plans, France introduced e-filing of VAT refund requests for non-EU businesses and Luxembourg announced that family wealth management companies must file the annual subscription tax (tax d’abonnement) electronically. Turkey officially expanded the scope of its e-documents application to include e-invoicing and e-currency purchase, sale document and e-reckoning applications, mandating taxpayers to switch to said applications. In Slovenia, the tax authorities developed e-applications for several tax assessment functions and worked on merging these applications for business-taking taxpayers.

For its part, Spain approved electronic forms for reporting cross-border arrangements after the implementation of Council Directive (EU) 2018/822 of 25 May 2018 regarding mandatory automatic exchange of information in the field of taxation relating to reportable cross-border arrangements (DAC6). Against this background, the practice of Chinese Taipei of offering tax “rewards” for businesses filing account documents electronically is noteworthy. Said prizes include the designation of an ad hoc professional adviser, a waiver of verification certificates and the ability to have tax returns reviewed on paper for up to 2 years. On their side, tax professionals who provide electronically (and “correctly”) books and relevant documents may be included in a list of recommended tax agents. In the same vein, Thailand offered tax reductions for e-withholding.

India updated its e-filing taxpayer portal to make it user-friendly, allowing quicker processing of income tax returns and the issuance of speedier refunds. The portal includes a new functionality feature to ease the compliance burden on taxpayers required to deduct or collect tax at source at higher rates from certain non-filers of income tax returns.

In the United Kingdom, an HMRC consultation document indicates an intention to increase and enhance facilities for e-filing over the next 4 years.

In the United States, several states started using e-filing for sales and other local taxes and processing tax rebates based on the COVID-19 pandemic. In addition, the IRS updated

Along the line of simplification, China (People's Rep.) integrated separate tax returns for ten types of taxes into a single return. Furthermore, effective 1 May 2021, taxpayers may file a single return for VAT, consumption tax, urban maintenance and construction tax, the education surcharge and local additional education charges in Hainan province, Shanxi province, Dalian and Xiamen as a pilot project.²⁴⁹

On the other hand, Greece was forced to further postpone the operation of its online platform for electronic invoicing,²⁵⁰ and Italy had to delay the publication of the pre-filled income tax returns and postponed twice the deadline to adhere to the online service for e-invoicing²⁵¹ due to the pandemic.

3. Confidentiality

3.1. General issues

In 2021, the trend in favour of establishing regulatory safeguards for confidentiality, while seemingly stable in other regions of the world, was dealt a blow in the European Union in the name of transparency.

Indeed, the enactment of Directive 2021/2101, as regards disclosure of income tax information by certain undertakings and branches, entails the public disclosure of country-by-country information on the direct taxation of multinational enterprises doing business in the European Union. It also includes the disclosure of said information regarding investments in every third country on the so-called blacklist or a country that spends 2 years on the so-called grey list.

The mandatory reporting also includes information regarding the nature of activities, the number of employees, the total net turnover made, the profit made before tax, the amount of income tax due in the country by reason of the profits made in the country in the year, the amount of tax actually paid during that year and the accumulated earnings.²⁵²
This information is disclosed in order—it is intended—to further promote corporate transparency and accountability, thereby contributing to the well-being of society and promoting a better informed public debate regarding the level of compliance of certain multinational enterprises, as well as the impact of tax compliance on the real economy, since—it is believed—this level of corporate income tax transparency serves the general economic interest of the European Union and helps regain citizens’ trust in the fairness of national tax systems.

It has been pointed out\(^{253}\) that this new regulation opens questions regarding the ability of public disclosure of raw data to facilitate the informed public dialogue it is intended to foster, particularly considering the difficulties that country-by-country reporting entails within tax assessments,\(^{254}\) and the proportionality of such a public disclosure with the right to privacy, while having regard to the fact that, according to the ECtHR’s Satakunnan Markkinapörssi case,\(^{255}\) the fact that information is already in the public domain will not necessarily remove the protection to privacy granted by article 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights.

Public country-by-country reporting has also been proposed by members of the United States Congress through the Disclosure of Tax Havens and Offshoring Act proposal, introduced in the House of Representatives on 5 May 2021.\(^{256}\)

Beyond the public country-by-country reporting in the European Union, the trend in favour of establishing regulatory safeguards for confidentiality seems to have remained stable in other regions of the world and keeps going forward in Latin America.

In Bolivia, the “large” wealth tax law (Ley de Impuesto a las Grandes Fortunas) provides for the confidentiality of the information obtained from taxpayers and third parties. Said information may only be used for tax assessment purposes, and it cannot be transferred to third parties without order of the competent authority. The law also punishes officials who violate these provisions with administrative, civil and criminal liabilities.\(^\text{257}\)

In Brazil, the Receita Federal (Federal Revenue Service) enacted the Portaria (Ordinance) 4/2021, establishing the conditions under which data protected by tax secrecy may be shared, through a secured and controlled virtual system, with other authorities of the Federal Accounting Court and the Office of the Federal Controller General. In addition, regarding data not covered by confidentiality, Ordinance 34/2021 details the procedure for requests made by federal authorities. In the latter case, the lack of protection as tax secrecy seems to lead to a lower standard of protection, although such data may also entail sensitive personal information.\(^\text{258}\)

In Chile, an amendment to the Tax Code is reported to have improved taxpayers’ access to private information, as well as its collection through digital platforms. Specifically, the code provides for a sitio personal (personal site), a carpeta electrónica (electronic folder) and an expediente electrónico (electronic file), in which the tax authorities will safeguard all the information related to the taxpayer. Taxpayers have free and secure access to said files through the SII’s website. Also, according to the Tax Code, service officials who access or use the information contained in those electronic files must guarantee taxpayers’ privacy according to the Chilean legislation that establish the confidentiality or secrecy of the actions or information contained in electronic files.\(^\text{259}\)

In the Dominican Republic, the Directorate General of Internal Revenue (Dirección General de Impuestos Internos (DGII)) announced technical improvements made to “third party” data queries on the Dominican state’s virtual office (intranet). Third-party data queries allow for

All these queries can be made for the current fiscal year and for up to 10 past fiscal years.260

Finally, in Ukraine, the Law about the Economic Security of Ukraine has been regarded as introducing a legal framework for better confidentiality, privacy protection and cyber security within the government and local authorities.261

In 2021, the regulatory enshrinement of enhanced confidentiality guarantees in Latin America was accompanied by specific measures to ensure the integrity of data held by the tax administration, according to reports.

As mentioned above, a secure and controlled virtual system was created in Brazil to avoid data misuse and leaking when tax secrecy-protected information is disclosed by the Federal Revenue Service to authorities of the Federal Accounting Court and the Office of the Federal Controller General, pursuant to Ordinance 4/2021.262

Unlike in 2020,\textsuperscript{265} a slight trend towards introducing administrative measures to ensure confidentiality to tax officials in 2021 may be identified through the reported developments.

First, the new structure of the National Tax and Customs Directorate (DIAN) of Colombia was implemented in 2021. Article 10 of Decree 1742 maintains the Information Security Office and grants it greater autonomy in the adoption of policies related to the security and privacy of information, as well as the definition of the handling policy and protocols for the delivery and receipt of information arising from compliance with the agreements signed by the entity.\textsuperscript{266}

In addition, in Honduras, the reform of the civil service regime in tax matters expressly added confidentiality as mandatory for tax officials. Furthermore, a Code of Probity and Ethics for SAR collaborators and an anti-corruption policy was approved in 2021, reinforcing the confidentiality obligations of public servants.\textsuperscript{267}

senior level and local tax offices in 2021, unlike in 2020.268

In Colombia, the reform of the DIAN’s structure, previously mentioned in section 3.5, of this yearbook, maintains the Information Security Office and grants it greater autonomy in the adoption of policies related to the security and privacy of information, as well as the definition of the handling policy and protocols for the delivery and receipt of information arising from compliance with the agreements signed by the entity.269

In Kazakhstan, a reform to Law 94-V, On Personal Data and Its Protection, required the appointment of data protection officers in all state agencies, including the tax administration. Such a person is entrusted, inter alia, with the following duties: to exercise internal control over compliance with legislation on the protection of personal data; to inform employees of the provisions of the legislation on the protection of personal data; and to control the reception and processing of appeals of entities or their legal representatives.270

Also, Lithuania reports that the State Tax Inspectorate has appointed a data protection officer, along with strengthening its team, to better comply with the requirements of the EU General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR).271

In Spain, the functions of the Data Protection Officer (DPO) at the Spanish Ministry of Finance and Civil Service have been carried out by the General Technical Secretary since August 2021.272

Finally, in the United States, the IRS Commissioner appointed a permanent Chief Information Officer in February 2021.273

In addition, very few developments were reported in 2021 regarding the provision of remedies to the victims of unauthorized disclosure of confidential information, so the situation remains stable in this regard.

In Chile, Letter 12/2021, in which the tax administration is instructed on the procedures to be followed to safeguard taxpayers’ rights, mentioned many times in this yearbook,275 regulates – along with the Tax Code – general remedies, but there is no specific remedy for unauthorized disclosure.276

Regretfully, as mentioned in sections 3.4. and 3.7. of this yearbook, no remedies have been granted in regard to the major data leak reported in Chinese Taipei.277

Some important developments regarding exceptions to the general rule of occurred in 2021, particularly in Europe, mostly leaning towards the fulfilment of the minimum standard. In general, proportionality was put to the test, allowing tax authorities to access greater quantities of information given sufficient guarantees for taxpayers.

Regarding whistle-blower protection, EU Member States had until 17 December 2021 to transpose the so-called EU Whistleblowing Directive, on the protection of persons who report breaches of Union law, including tax law. To date, only seven of the EU Member States, namely Austria, Bulgaria, Cyprus, Denmark, France, Lithuania, Malta, Portugal and Sweden, appear to have transposed said directive into domestic law.

Although not directly related to tax matters, in the context of exceptions to the right to privacy, it is worth mentioning the two landmark ECtHR Grand Chamber rulings on the interception of communications by national security services.

In the Big Brother Watch and Others and the Centrum För Rättvisa cases, the court held that the mass surveillance bulk interception regimes of Sweden and the United Kingdom violated the right to privacy for, first, their lack of sufficient oversight of the selection of bearers for interception, the selectors used for filtering intercepted communications and the process by which analysts selected intercepted communications for examination; and, second, the absence of any real safeguards applicable to the searching and selection for examination of related communications data. In the Centrum För Rättvisa case, the court held that the system allowed the risk of mass interception and examination of mass communications by way of signals intelligence, namely intercepting, processing, analysing and reporting intelligence from electronic signals.280

In this regard, the court determined that, in terms of privacy, bulk interception regimes should be assessed against eight safeguards, namely: (i) the circumstances in which an individual's communications may be intercepted; (ii) the procedure to be followed for granting authorisation; (iii) the procedures to be followed for selecting, examining and using intercept material; (iv) the precautions to be taken when communicating the material to other parties; (v) the limits on the duration of interception, the storage of intercept material and the circumstances in which such material must be erased and destroyed; (vi) the procedures and modalities for supervision by an independent authority of compliance with the above safeguards and its powers to address non-compliance; (vii) the procedures for independent ex post facto review of such compliance and (viii) the powers vested in the competent body in addressing instances of non-compliance.281

Also regarding the limits to the exceptions on confidentiality, the Supreme Court of Spain has strictly interpreted the Spanish general rule of confidentiality282 in an interesting series of decisions. According to the court, the tax authorities are only allowed to use taxpayer information for tax purposes, as listed in the text of the law. It is therefore prohibited to use taxpayer information for other purposes, such as to serve as evidence for the commission of a non-tax administrative offence. In the case of the transfer of data to other administrations for non-tax purposes, the express authorisation of the data subject must be stated.283

281 Big Brother Watch and Others, supra n. 10, at para. 361.

For its part, in the aftermath of the adoption of the seventh modification of Council Directive 2011/16/EU on administrative cooperation in the field of taxation (DAC7), which introduced a reporting obligation for digital platforms on revenues generated by sellers on these platforms as of 1 January 2023, a series of interesting cases are currently before the ECJ regarding the proportionality of requests for information by (tax) authorities in Belgium.

Indeed, the Cour Constitutionnelle raised a preliminary question to determine the tax nature and, therefore, the scope of the duty to provide information to be supplied by digital platforms on the details of the operator and contact details of tourist accommodation establishments, as well as the number of overnight stays and accommodation units operated during the previous year, in order to identify the taxable persons liable to a regional tax on tourist accommodation establishments and their taxable income. An additional preliminary question in this matter, related to the VAT Directives applicable to intermediary digital platforms, has been raised by the First-Tier Tribunal (Tax Chamber) of the United Kingdom.

Also, the Court of Appeals of Liège raised a preliminary question in two cases to determine the proportionality of a measure according to which cross-border service users are required, in order to avoid a corporation tax levy of 100% or 50% of the sums invoiced by their providers, to complete and submit to the tax authorities individual fee forms and summary statements relating to those expenses, whereas, if they use the services of resident companies, they are under no such obligation in order to avoid that levy.

https://www.poderjudicial.es/search/AN/openDocument/e09f8bec17f76520210622 (accessed 2 Feb. 2022);

In the same vein, AG Bobek opined that the General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR)\(^{288}\) does not prohibit requests for information addressed by the tax authority to internet service providers insofar as the request is linked to the determination of advertisers’ tax obligations and there is a clear legal basis in national law for such a type of data transfer and the data requested are suitable and necessary for the tax authority to complete its official tasks.\(^{289}\)

In this latter regard, it should be reported that Italy amended its implementing rules on the electronic storage and daily transmission of data, so these are only shared through the latest approved version of the electronic transmission system, taking also into account the difficulties caused by the COVID-19 pandemic.\(^{290}\)

In addition, the Netherlands officially announced that, as from 1 January 2022, the obligation to disclose data and information to the Dutch tax authorities will be extended to withholding agents that make payments to an individual for work and services performed for the withholding agent itself or a company affiliated with the withholding agent and collective management organizations (CBOs), i.e., organizations that act on behalf of a group of rightsholders in collecting and distributing fees for a copyright or related right on a non-profit basis.\(^{291}\)

Complementary Law 187/2021 of Brazil amended the National Tax Code (article 198) to expressly authorize the disclosure of tax benefits and other special treatments, based on which some states have already been disclosing such information.\(^{292}\)

Along the same lines, the Federal Court upheld the Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) request for data from Coinsquare Ltd, one of Canada's largest cryptocurrency exchanges, allowing it to compare it with a similar IRS data request. Nonetheless, the request was significantly reduced by the court after an agreement was reached between Coinsquare and the tax authority.\(^{293}\)

However, the United States' Supreme Court (SCOTUS) took a different direction. SCOTUS invalidated a California law requiring charitable organizations to disclose donor information to the California Office of the Attorney General, used as a means against tax fraud, on the grounds that the law overburdens donors' freedom of speech rights and "indiscriminately sweep[s] up the information of every major donor with reason to remain anonymous". addition, SCOTUS unanimously permitted CIC Services LLC to sue the IRS to set aside an IRS notice containing reporting requirements that are enforced through a tax penalty, thereby circumventing the Anti-Injunction Act, which prevents pre-payment litigation to contest tax assessment and collection, by holding that CIC’s suit does not trigger the AIA, because it targets the IRS’s reporting mandate itself, not the tax penalty.294

Naming and shaming was under scrutiny in 2021, as it was in 2020.295

The ECtHR’s Fourth Chamber issued its judgment in the L.B. v. Hungary case, endorsing the measure as legitimate, rational and proportionate in the framework of a democratic society to improve tax discipline, protect the economic well-being of a country and protect the interest of third parties regarding the tax situation of potential business partners, insofar as it was within the margin of appreciation enjoyed by the state in the exercise of its tax collection powers and in balance with the limits imposed on that margin by the taxpayer’s right to privacy. However, the dissenting vote stated strongly that naming and shaming was “modern pillory”. The case was referred to the Grand Chamber.296

Along the lines of the L.B. v. Hungary ECtHR ruling, naming and shaming has been endorsed by the decision of the Commercial Court of the West Siberian District of Russia in the

Mexico regularly publishes and updates a list of taxpayers presumed to have entered into non-existent transactions, regardless of the absence of an assessment procedure against them.298

However, moving towards the fulfilment of the minimum standard, the General Administration of Taxation of China (People’s Rep.) adopted administrative measures for the publication of information on major tax debtors, further strengthening taxpayers’ protection by stipulating that the tax authorities need to inform taxpayers before releasing their information so that the latter may exercise their rights beforehand and apply for the early suspension of the publication of information on breach of trust. Likewise, the new Measures for the Administration of Disclosure of Violating Tax Law and Dishonesty grant taxpayers the rights to be informed of and to defend against the naming-and-shaming decision. The new rules will come into force in 2022.299

In addition, along with a modification of the legal basis for naming and shaming, broadening the scope of the measure by diminishing its monetary threshold, the Supreme Court of Spain admitted a case in which the proportionality of naming and shaming will be under review. According to the court, in naming and shaming, information is being published that, although it does not show completely and in its entirety the economic situation of the taxpayer by describing only the debit existing with a certain subject, can provide indications about the economic level of those taxpayers included in the aforementioned list, which could conflict with the right to privacy of debtor taxpayers and, therefore, would require a judgment of proportionality that would make it possible to assess whether the benefits or advantages reported by restricting the rights to privacy and data protection are greater than the damages that such restriction would cause.

On 6 November 2020, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights received a request for precautionary measures urging the Commission to request that the State of El Salvador adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights of 34 members of the digital newspaper, El Faro.

According to the request, said journalists were being subjected to threats, harassment, intimidation, as well as criminalization and stigmatization by high government authorities, as a result of their work.

Among other actions of alleged censorship, on 20 July 2020, the Attorney General’s Office opened an investigation related to an audit on the accountability records of the referred newspaper carried out by the Department of Criminal Investigation and Tax Regulations of the Ministry of Finance. In the opinion of the applicants, a series of abuses and irregularities would have been committed by the Ministry of Finance against the newspaper.

Furthermore, according to the applicants, the governmental authorities had extensively used social media and other platforms under their control to target El Faro’s journalists. They highlighted that the government used a nationwide television broadcast to advertise the fact that the above newspaper was being investigated for tax evasion.

The applicants also stated that on 11 November 2020, the President of El Salvador, Mr Nayib Bukele, started a thread on his Twitter account against El Faro. The messages stated “pay your taxes you crybabies” and “you damned liars the day will come when you will not even have money to pay your internet bills”.

The applicants considered that all these actions were a response to their investigative work and critical stance towards the current government.

In its response, the Salvadorian government.

In light of the corresponding context, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights considered that the information provided by the applicants showed prima facie that not only the freedom of thought and expression, but also the rights to life and personal integrity of the 34 members of the digital newspaper, were in a serious and urgent situation.

Consequently, and in accordance with article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that the State of El Salvador (a) adopt the necessary measures to preserve the life and personal integrity of the journalists; (b) take the necessary measures so such journalists can carry out their journalistic activities in exercise of their right to freedom of expression, without being subjected to acts of intimidation, threats and harassment; and (c) investigate the alleged facts that led to the adoption of the precautionary measures, so as to prevent them from reoccurring.

This case reminds us of a judgment issued in 2002 by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in the José María Cantos v. Argentina case. Mr Cantos had filed a legal action against the provincial tax office of Santiago del Estero (in Argentina), in an effort to collect damages because of certain irregularities committed at the time of auditing his companies. More specifically, he claimed the payment of approximately USD 2,780,000,000. The Argentinian Supreme Court of Justice required from the claimant the payment of a judicial tax (tasa judicial) in the amount of USD 83,400,000 (i.e. 3% of the claimed damages). The Inter-American Court found that, by imposing such requirement, the Argentinian state had violated articles 8 and 25 of the American Convention, which respectively recognize the taxpayer’s right to a fair trial and judicial protection. Therefore, the court ordered the state to refrain from collecting such judicial tax.

Despite the apparent similarities, it should be noted that, in such case, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights also recognized that the right of access to a domestic court is not an absolute and, therefore, may be subject to certain limitations. At the end of the day, the Inter-American Court based its judgment only on the grounds that the intention to collect the above sum of money was excessive and not proportional, both of which must be analysed and determined on a case-by-case basis.

That said, and in accordance with the Commission’s recent report, the protection of the right to a fair trial appears to have been affected insofar as no effective mechanism would have been implemented to suspend the payment of the bonds and to provide the taxpayer access to justice. If it is true that the taxpayer had no financial capacity to post such bonds, the tax court should have acknowledged this special situation.
state pointed out that although journalists are protected under the freedom of expression, they must perform their work obeying the principles of responsible journalism, (that is, acting in good faith, providing accurate and reliable information, reflecting the opinions of all those involved in public debate with objectivity and refraining from falling into sensationalism).

Along these lines, the Salvadoran state declared that it rejected any claims of it impeding journalistic work and that, in such country, there is a solid institutional and constitutional framework.

Regarding the audit on El Faro, the state asserted that the power for evaluation corresponding to the Ministry of Finance is related to the fulfilment of the formal and substantive obligations that are inherent to tax legislation. The exercise of this power is independent of the subject to whom it is addressed. The state declared to be against the comments referring to the audit on El Faro as arbitrary and malicious.

After the Commissioner v. Public Protector ruling of 23 March 2020, in which the Gauteng Division of the High Court of South Africa denied the public prosecutor access to taxpayer information, which was held by the South African Revenue Service (SARS), about the country’s former president based on the minimum standard banning disclosures to politicians, it is surprising that the same Court ruled in a later decision – related to the same taxpayer – that the rights to freedom and speech and access to information override the taxpayer’s right to secrecy “when the exercise of those rights are in the public interest”. In other words, according to the court, public interest overrides a possible encroachment or limitation of taxpayer confidentiality. SARS will appeal the case.

3.12. The interplay between taxpayer confidentiality and freedom of information legislation

Minimum standard: Freedom of information legislation may allow a taxpayer to access information about himself. However, access to information by third parties should be subject to stringent safeguards, namely only if an independent tribunal concludes that, in disclosing, the public interest outweighs the right of confidentiality, and only after a hearing where the taxpayer has an opportunity to be heard.

In the present case, the purpose and the principal effect of publication were to inform the public, and the main reason for making such data available online was to make the information easily accessible.

available and accessible to those concerned, irrespective of their place of residence.

The tax authority’s website did not provide the public with a means of shaming the applicant, for example, a way of posting comments underneath the lists in question.

Given the specific context in which the information at issue was published, the fact that the publication was designed to secure the availability and accessibility of information in the public interest and the limited effect of the publication on the applicant’s daily life, the Court considers that the publication fell within the respondent state’s margin of appreciation.

On 20 April 2021, the Helsinki Administrative Court (Helsingin hallinto-oikeus) in Finland gave decisions in seven cases regarding appeals filed by different media companies against the tax administration, which had refused to give them income information of individuals who had asked their income information to be kept secret. The media had requested a list of names of those taxpayers, which the tax authorities denied on the grounds of confidentiality. However, the court upheld that details on the use of taxpayers’ right to object to the disclosure of tax relevant information is not protected by secrecy.

For its part, in the context of the implementation of the General Law for Protection of Personal Data, the Receita Federal (Federal Revenue Service) of Brazil enacted the Portaria (Ordinance) No. 81/2021, allowing a taxpayer to authorize the sharing of specific data to third parties specifically indicated by the former.

However, the introduction of the so-called financial institution notices in the United Kingdom, a request to financial institutions to provide documents to the tax authorities for assessing a given taxpayer or collecting outstanding debts, shifts away from the minimum standard as long as there is no requirement for an officer to seek the taxpayer’s consent or the approval of a court before issuing a financial institution notice, and the third party’s right of appeal has been removed and replaced by a requirement that the officer reasonably believes that providing the information or producing the document would not be unduly onerous.\(^{307}\)

2021 Relevant Requests for a Preliminary Ruling – Court of Justice of the European Union
Legal professional privilege continued to go back and forth in 2021.

In Europe, Spain transposed Council Directive (EU) 2018/822 (DAC6) while expanding the scope of legal professional privilege to in-house counsel.\(^\text{310}\)

In addition, the Constitutional Court of Belgium suspended the Flemish, the Walloon and the Brussels transposition of the directive, insofar as it relates to certain aspects of the reporting obligation of cross-border tax arrangements as imposed on lawyers.\(^\text{311}\) The court wished to have an answer first to the preliminary question raised to the ECJ on whether Directive 2018/822 is compatible with the right to a fair trial and the right to respect for private life, as it forces Member States to provide for an exception to the “legal privilege under the national law of that Member State” when an intermediary is required to inform another intermediary. In particular, the court asked whether the duty of the intermediary “lawyer” to disclose information that he has learned in the course of exercising the essential activity of his profession to another...

intermediary, even outside any court proceeding, is compatible with the rights to a fair trial and respect for private life.\textsuperscript{312}

Also, in Belgium, the Court of Appeal of Antwerp confirmed the crucial importance of lawyers’ professional secrecy and the central role that the President of the Bar plays in safeguarding it. The President of the Bar must filter the documents and data copied or taken away by the tax authorities in the context of a search of premises, i.e. check that nothing is included that would violate professional secrecy if the tax authorities became aware of it. It must also be possible to do this post factum, when the data is already in the possession of the tax authorities. In this specific case, the taxpayer, who only found out afterwards that the tax authorities had copied confidential emails with his lawyer during a search of the premises, won and the tax authorities had to hand over all copied data to the President of the Bar (via sequestration).\textsuperscript{313}

2021 also provided a few developments regarding the relationship between professional secrecy, public consultation and taxpayer involvement in the making of tax policy and tax law.\textsuperscript{314}

In the Netherlands, continuing with the ongoing debate about the scope of legal privilege – and despite recent decisions from the judiciary (although unrelated to tax matters) upholding it against a presumed public interest in disclosure\textsuperscript{315} – there was public consultation for a legislative proposal that, if approved, would result in lawyers, notaries and legal professionals being limited in their privilege regarding information that a tax adviser would also have to disclose, considering the fair play principle. It is expected that the consultation will lead to a legislative proposal in 2022.\textsuperscript{316}

In the Americas, in a very interesting development, the Supremo Tribunal Federal (Supreme Federal Court) of Brazil declared a series of state laws extending liability for tax offences committed by taxpayers to their advisers to be unconstitutional. The judicial declaration overturned the thesis according to which liability for tax offences can be extended to third parties based on the vicariousness inherent to tort liability, a criterion followed by a few Latin American countries.\textsuperscript{317}

However, the latest reform of the Federal Tax Code of Mexico classifies, as a tax offence, failure to report the omission of taxes collected, withheld, transferred or the taxpayer’s own taxes, punishable by a fine for the auditor who certifies the financial statements. Thus, Mexican tax advisers appear to be legally obliged to serve as whistle-blowers for the activities that are at the core of their practice.\textsuperscript{318}

4. Normal Audits

4.1. Tax audits and its foundation principles

Facts and legal qualifications are an essential part of correct tax assessments; therefore, they are also a fundamental part of the tax administration’s means to enforce the law. Today, much tax reporting is pre-populated for the tax returns, but additional investigation is often required in order to determine potential tax liability and, if so, the appropriate amount. As a crucial part of the tax authorities’ practical enforcement of the tax code, these investigations require that the authorities abide by the law, just as it necessitates that taxpayers’ rights are adequately addressed and protected.

From a procedural aspect, tax audits should be conducted around four fundamental principles of general procedural law, namely (i) proportionality; (ii) non bis in idem, or the prohibition of double jeopardy; (iii) audi alteram partem, or the right to be heard before any decision is taken; and (iv) nemo tenetur se detegere, or the principle against self-incrimination.

If a tax assessment is conducted and an audit is carried out contrary to these four principles, it should be considered null and void.

Against this background, it is important to stress that, whereas good tax governance is converging towards the minimum standards, it is not enough by itself. As Baker and Pistone have said, making tax governance prevail over taxpayers’ rights endangers the possibility of the latter’s access to an effective legal remedy securing consistency when tax authorities do not do what they are supposed to do to comply with the good tax governance standards.\textsuperscript{319}

319 Baker & Pistone, supra n. 16, at sec. 4.1.
according to Chart 28) is promising.\textsuperscript{320} In 2015, it was reported that the practice of \textbf{Denmark} involving professional associations in the appointment of independent experts was particularly interesting in this respect.\textsuperscript{321}

Minimum standard: Audits should respect the following principles: (i) proportionality; (2) \textit{non bis in idem} (prohibition of double jeopardy); (3) \textit{audi alteram partem} (right to be heard before any decision is taken); and (4) \textit{nemo tenetur se detegere} (principle against self-incrimination). Tax notices issued in violation of these principles should be null and void.

Shifted towards/improved the minimum standard:
- Chile, Slovenia

Shifted away from the minimum standard:
- Guatemala, United Kingdom

In terms of the states respecting these four principles when conducting tax audits, some progress has been reported in \textbf{Chile}, where the Servicio de Impuestos Internos Letter No. 12 (mentioned in several sections of this yearbook\textsuperscript{322}) has been regarded as producing a general improvement of administrative procedures in favour of taxpayers and making administrative dispute resolution mechanisms more effective under the four basic principles.\textsuperscript{323}

In \textbf{Slovenia}, the Constitutional Court declared a surcharge tax of 70\% on undeclared income fully applicable just by the commencement of an ex officio assessment to be unconstitutional. The Constitutional Court asserted that by enacting a surcharge, the legislature did not pursue the objective of financing public spending or any socio-political objective but rather a measure intended to either (i) remedy the damage sustained by public finances and its incomes due to a violation of the obligation to declare income; (ii) nullify the benefits that the taxable persons had as a result of such violations (i.e. a restitutive measure); or (iii) punish the taxable persons for such violations (i.e. a punitive measure). As long as the procedure for imposing said surcharge did not abide by the minimum procedural guarantees, the court declared it unconstitutional.\textsuperscript{324}

At the same time, the introduction of financial institution notices in the \textbf{United Kingdom} (as commented on in section 3.12 of this yearbook) departs from the \textit{audi alteram partem} minimum standard by not requiring court approval before its issuance and the removal of the rights to appeal of affected third parties.\textsuperscript{325}

Minimum standard: In the application of proportionality, tax authorities may only request information that is strictly needed, not otherwise available and that imposes the least burdensome impact on taxpayers.

Shifted towards/improved the minimum standard: Chile, Slovenia, Denmark

Shifted away from the minimum standard: Belgium, Guatemala

The principle of proportionality – as a minimum standard for ensuring that tax authorities may only request information that is strictly needed, not otherwise available and that imposes the least burdensome impact on taxpayers – has seen both improvements and setbacks.

In Chile, the improvement forms part of a general enhancement of the taxpayer bill of rights due to an amendment of the Tax Code, as developed by the Servicio de Impuestos Internos Letters No. 12 and 41, mentioned throughout this yearbook. Particularly, Letter No. 12 enhances the protection of taxpayers regarding the statute of limitations, non bis in idem (by prohibiting multiple audits over the same taxpayer for the same taxable events), etc.326

In Denmark, an obligation to provide transfer pricing documentation for domestic Danish transactions under section 39(1) of the Danish Tax Control Act was repealed, as it was considered to be particularly burdensome and without any real purpose since internal Danish transactions do not entail a risk of profit shifting. The bill specifically motivated this amendment by referring to the principle that taxpayers should face as few burdens as possible.327

On the other hand, it became increasingly common during the COVID-19 pandemic for the authorities in Belgium to initiate the audit of a taxpayer by requesting that the taxpayer, or his/her accountant, provide a digital backup file containing the entire bookkeeping/accounts of the taxpayer. This raises questions regarding the proportionality of such practices.328

Also regarding proportionality, an administrative practice has been reported in Guatemala, according to which the Servicio de Administración Tributaria (SAT) claims to have the right to receive all information requested within 3 days.329

Finally, as reported previously in sections 3.12 and 4.1 of this yearbook, the introduction of financial institution notices in the United Kingdom shifts away from audi alteram partem.330

Best practice: In application of non bis in idem, the taxpayer should only receive one audit per taxable period, except when facts become known after the audit was completed.

The taxpayer complained that the law establishes a presumption of guilt for smuggling that was allegedly committed by third parties, unrelated to the taxpayer.

The non bis in idem principle represents a further guarantee of proportionality and an assurance of certainty for taxpayers. This principle is fundamental in every state’s intervention in its citizens’ private sphere, including for tax audits. The principle provides a proportionate limit to the authorities’ interference and, in terms of certainty, the principle grants taxpayers certitude on their tax matters for a specific period or a given tax.

For tax proceedings, non bis in idem means that the taxpayer must only be subject to one audit per taxable period, comprehensively covering all possible issues that might arise from the underlying investigation. The sole exception is facts that become known after the audit is completed.

Regarding non bis in idem, the judgment of the National Court (Audiencia Nacional) of Spain dated 3 June 2021 set an important precedent. According to the decision, once a limited audit has been carried out for a given tax and period, which ended without any additional assessments, it is not possible to subsequently initiate another limited verification procedure for the same tax and tax period, in order to request additional documentation, if there are no new facts or data that justify such a procedure.\(^{333}\)

Additionally, as mentioned several times in this yearbook, the Servicio de Impuestos Internos Letter No. 12 in Chile expressly prohibits the initiation of a new audit procedure, either in the same financial year or in subsequent periods, in respect of items or events that have already been the subject of an audit procedure.\(^{334}\)

Although non bis in idem is reported to be applicable in the United States, the tax authority may engage in repeat audits that it deems necessary. Also, the IRS has several summary assessments and return review processes that appear to taxpayers and function substantially as correspondence audits but do not trigger the corresponding protections, under the so-called “unreal” audits. These unreal audits constitute most IRS compliance contacts and include mathematical error corrections and automated underreported (document matching) notices, among others.\(^{335}\)

Facts:
The case concerns the legality of a financial penalty that was imposed on a company for refusing to provide certain information following a request for exchange of information between Member States in tax matters.

Decision:
In order to ensure the efficacy of the right to an effective remedy protected under article 47 of the Charter, the addressee of the information order must – if the legality of that order is upheld by the court – be given the opportunity to comply with that order within the time limit initially prescribed for that purpose by national law, without that entailing the continued application of the penalty that person had to incur in order to exercise his or her right to an effective remedy. It is only if the addressee does not comply with the order within that time limit that the penalty imposed would legitimately become payable.

Comments:
Opinion of AG Kokott delivered on 3 June 2021: Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union requires that the addressee of the information order should either be given access to the information stipulated in article 20(2) of Directive 2011/16 already together with that order or, at the very least, be given an appropriate period of time under procedural law following receipt of that information in which to review and comply with the order without incurring any costs or penalty. In that case, there is no need for an additional period of grace for payment.

The tax authority found that the taxpayer had infringed the provisions governing food safety, thus showing lack of due diligence, and led it to conclude that the taxpayer had participated knowingly in the fraud. The taxpayer argues that it is not subject to the Hungarian provisions on food safety and that the tax authority did not indicate the provision under which the applicant should have obtained and kept the certificates of quality it was alleged not to have.</td>
<td>Q5: Is a practice of a tax authority pursuant to which that authority bases its ruling on an alleged infringement of provisions governing the safety of the food supply chain which have no bearing on compliance by the taxable person with his tax obligations or on the circulation of his invoices, which the tax legislation does not provide for in any way in relation to the taxable person and which have no effect on the actual facts of the transactions inspected by the tax authority and on the taxable person’s awareness examined in the tax proceedings, compatible with articles 167, 168(a) and 178(a) of the VAT Directive, with the right to a fair trial (recognized as a general principle in article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union) and with the principle of legal certainty? In the event the previous question is answered in the affirmative: Q6: Is a practice of a tax authority whereby that authority, without the involvement of the official body responsible for the safety of the food supply chain, which has material and territorial competence, sets out in its ruling findings concerning the taxable person which come within that official body’s sphere of competence, such that, based on infringements identified in relation to the safety of the food supply chain – a matter outside its sphere of competence – it draws tax consequences for the taxable person, without that person being able to dispute the finding that he infringed the provisions on food supply chain safety in proceedings that are separate from the tax proceedings and which respect the fundamental guarantees and the parties’ rights, compatible with articles 167, 168(a) and 178(a) of the VAT Directive, with the right to a fair trial (recognized as a general principle in article 47 of the Charter) and with the principle of legal certainty?</td>

At the same time, as reported in section 3.12 of this yearbook, a shift away from the minimum standard has been reported in the United Kingdom with the introduction of financial institution notices permitting an authorized officer to issue a notice without the right of the taxpayer to be heard or for the financial institution to appeal on the grounds complying with the notice would be unduly burdensome.339

There were no reported changes regarding nemo tenetur in 2021, as was the case in 2020. This situation seems to confirm the decelerating of the trend towards limiting the principle that the OPTR has been reporting since 2018, although not curtailing it. Only the United States reports the current status of the matter in the country; based on the United States v. Neff case, it is stated that there is a right against self-incrimination in criminal proceedings and with respect to crimes. However, one cannot refuse to file a tax return on that basis.

4.2. The structure and content of tax audits

The Australian Taxation Office (ATO) issued guidance on whether the presence of employees in the country, due to the COVID-19 pandemic, creates a permanent establishment for the employer. The ATO decided not to conduct audits to determine the existence of a permanent establishment until 30 June 2021, provided that the employee’s presence is directly caused by the restrictions imposed by the pandemic and the employee’s activity is not considered to be sourced in Australia for income tax purposes in another jurisdiction.

As previously reported several times in this yearbook, in Chile, the tax authorities extensively regulated their own actions in the context of tax assessments, aiming to better protect taxpayers’ rights through Servicio de Impuestos Internos Letters No. 12 and 41. In this regard, Letter No. 12 gives instructions on taxpayers’ rights, appearance, notifications, administrative and judicial appeal procedures, while Letter No. 41 instructs tax authorities regarding the application of the rules governing their relationship with taxpayers, including rules on the website, facilitation of tax compliance, life cycle and taxpayer control.

Likewise, in Spain, the Directorate General of the State Tax Administration Agency issued the general guidelines for the Annual Tax and Customs Control Plan 2021. Among other aspects, the Plan highlights the need to use digital communication to “bring taxpayers closer” to the Tax Administration office without them necessarily having to travel to the physical headquarters. At this point in time, however, the complementary nature of these type of actions should be considered in relation to ordinary actions, which are by nature face-to-face.

The Maldives Inland Revenue Authority (MIRA) issued new tax administration regulations, adding (i) further details on the list of records to be kept by taxpayers; (ii) rules to be followed by the MIRA during tax audits; and (iii) other administrative details. Among other features, the regulations specify new rules to be followed by the MIRA in carrying out audits of taxpayers’ accounts (these do not apply if the taxpayer has failed to submit a tax return for the period being audited) and add items to the list to be factored in by the MIRA when issuing an amended assessment, such as information contained in the bank statements, other documents that show transactions made through banks, etc. Also, they specify that, where the MIRA makes a decision in respect of a period for which the taxpayer has filed a tax return, the taxpayer may not amend the return in such a way that it alters a decision of the MIRA, and repeal the provision stating that a taxpayer may not object to a decision of the MIRA pursuant to a request by the taxpayer for an extension of the period to fulfil an obligation under a tax law, or a request for the relief of fines outstanding due to the failure to fulfil such obligation during that period.345

In the United States, the IRS has issued an alert stating that it will continue to audit improper amended returns and refund claims for the domestic production activities deduction (DPAD) under the repealed section 199 of the US Internal Revenue Code.346

In Chile, the general improvement of tax procedures and safeguards for taxpayers’ rights, arising out of the Servicio de Impuestos Internos Letters No. 12 and 41, includes the possibility for taxpayers to request the start of a tax audit, particularly in the cases of the so-called reposición administrativa voluntaria (voluntary administrative replenishment).349

At the same time, a shift away from the minimum standard has been reported in Uruguay, where some municipal governments have engaged private companies to collect taxes owed for advertising activities. These activities, which should be characterized as tax audits, have been conducted without first informing the alleged taxpayers.351

Concerning the best practice that there should be an initial meeting with the taxpayer, a judgement of the Supreme Court of Spain of 22 April 2021 established an obligation for the tax administration to verify not only what is harmful to the taxpayer but also what is favourable. In addition, a judgment of the Supreme Court of 26 May 2021 stated that the tax administration should analyse all necessary requirements in order to declare, as unduly paid, the input VAT subject to a refund claim.352

On the other hand, a shift away from the best practice was reported in Colombia, where article 14 of Law 2155 of 2021 established that the official determination of income tax will be made by invoicing based on information obtained from third parties and the e-invoice system. The invoice must be notified to the taxpayer. If the taxpayer does not agree with the income tax invoice, he/she must file the respective tax return and pay within 2 months following the notification. Otherwise, the invoice will become final and enforceable, without the need for a prior audit or meeting. If the taxpayer files the tax return, the tax administration may issue a provisional official assessment or an official assessment.353

Minimum standard: Taxpayers should be informed of information gathering from third parties.

Russia has reported a shift away from this minimum standard under the Russian Tax Code. According to article 100(3.1.), tax authorities are obliged to disclose any evidence used against the taxpayer, and the rule is applied for refusing to disclose any evidence that is not used against the taxpayers, even if it may be in their favour. This view has been upheld in practice, as well in the NelidovPressMash case from the Russian Supreme Court (judgment dated 1 April 2021).354

Likewise, the United Kingdom reported a shift away from the minimum standard, as the new financial institution notice procedure (mentioned several times in this yearbook) allows the tax authority to require a financial institution to produce information or documents relating to a named taxpayer in certain circumstances, without seeking the consent either of the named taxpayer or of the tribunal.\(^{355}\)

4.3. Time limits for normal audits

Best practice: Reasonable time limits should be fixed for the conduct of audits.

Shifted towards/matched the best practice:
- Chile, China (People's Rep.), Russia

Shifted away from the best practice:

Certainty for taxpayers is a fundamental right, and part of this right includes a reasonable time limit for audits. Interestingly, this best practice is not present in most surveyed jurisdictions, as only 42% of surveyed countries reported time constraints applicable for tax audits.

Reports with diverging opinions: Slovenia

The notion of a “reasonable” time limit is not easily determined and varies greatly between jurisdictions based on their specific legal context and background, in terms of a formal timeline and efforts to reduce the average time spent on a tax audit.

Alongside the reported developments in the protection of taxpayers’ rights arising from Letters No. 12 and 41 in Chile, which include the minimization of time limits for tax audits, the State Administration of Taxation of China (People’s Rep.) has issued guidance rules on the procedures for handling tax audits that reinforce the supervision and restraint mechanism and protect taxpayers’ rights, including the reduction of the time for tax audits.

Besides the reported progress produced by the issuance of Letters No. 12 and 41 in Chile, which also include the finalization of tax audits with administrative acts for which taxpayers’ rights of participation and notification must be ensured,\(^{361}\) there were developments towards the fulfilment of the minimum standards and best practices related to the termination of tax assessment in Belgium. In 2021, taxpayers who were subject to a tax audit could already consult the audit report on their personal file in MyMinfin. In a recent press release, the tax authorities announced that for audits closed after 14 October 2021, also the intermediaries with a mandate for certain electronic applications (MyMinfin, Biztax or Intervat) will have access to the audit reports of their clients in MyMinfin.\(^{362}\)

5. More Intensive Audits

5.1. The general framework

Best practice: More intensive audits should be limited and only occur when strictly necessary to ensure an effective reaction to non-compliance.

Shifted towards/matched the best practice:

- China (People’s Rep.)

Shifted away from the best practice:

- None

While 2021 was characterized by notable activity in terms of criminal prosecutions and penalties imposed for the commission of tax offences, as indicated in section 7.1, this did not make an appreciable difference to the level of compliance with minimum standards and best practices relating to the most intensive audits.

As regards the limited nature of the powers of the tax administration in the context of these audits, only China (People’s Rep.) reported a shift towards the fulfilment of the best practice. The tax authorities revised the Regulations on Tax Audit Work in 2021 and renamed them as the Regulations on Procedures for Handling Tax Audit Cases (also reported in section 4.3, of this yearbook). The Regulations, while continuing the regulations on the selection of cases for audit, clarify the need to strengthen the management of case sources and add new provisions that the inspection bureau may conduct inspections before filing a case in accordance with the law if necessary. Criminal investigation authority usually acts based on the cases handed over by tax agencies or other governmental institutions.363

---

On the other hand, the government of Malta adopted Act VIII of 2021 to strengthen the powers of the Commissioner for Revenue in combating tax evasion by granting more powers of investigation and allowing for the sharing of information. The amendments also place additional mechanisms at the disposal of the Commissioner for Revenue when there are reasonable grounds to suspect the evasion of tax due, including the right to request assistance from the local police.\(^{364}\)

5.2. The implications of the nemo tenetur principle in connection with subsequent criminal proceedings

Minimum standard: If, in the course of an audit, it becomes foreseeable that the taxpayer may be liable for a penalty or criminal charge, from that point, the taxpayer should have stronger protection of his right to silence and his statements should not be used in the audit procedure.

Reports with diverging opinions: Slovenia

Trends in the recognition of nemo tenetur in the context of intensive audits seem to have stabilized in 2021, considering no major developments were reported. However, the only development reported in this regard maintains the downward trend that the OPTR has been reporting regarding taxpayers’ right to not self-incriminate since 2018.\(^{365}\)

Indeed, Mexico has reported a shift away from the minimum standard in this area, as an amendment to the Federal Tax Code now requires certified public accountants preparing the report on audit of financial statements for tax purposes to report to the tax authorities if they become aware of a possible criminal conduct incurred by the taxpayer, affecting the latter’s right to professional advice (as analysed in section 3.14 of this yearbook), the presumption of innocence and, naturally, nemo tenetur.366

For their part, in the United States, the practices for the inquiry of taxpayers potentially involved in criminal activity appear to be geared towards the full protection of the right against self-incrimination. Witnesses must be informed ex ante of their option to not testifying based on this right, which must be expressly exercised. Subjects who make verbal statements or give testimony to special agents during an investigation or at a US tax court trial may still rely upon their constitutional protections and refuse to testify at trial of their indictment for tax crimes. Shifting away from the minimum standards and best practices, the State Court of Appeals of Minas Gerais, Brazil, found prior authorization by the judiciary to enter premises (an accounting office) unnecessary since such an activity would represent – in the view of the court – a mere exercise of the police power by tax authorities. An extraordinary appeal against this decision was not entertained by the Supreme Federal Court. The decision is debatable, considering the guarantee of inviolability of the home, as the Supreme Federal Court has previously recognized that any evidence obtained in non-authorized on-site inspections is illegal and not permitted for use in a trial. Despite this constitutional guarantee, infra-

constitutional legislation authorizes the access of taxpayers’ premises by tax authorities without prior judicial authorization.368

On the other hand, in Spain, it follows from a Supreme Court judgment of 14 July 2021 that the tax administration cannot conduct investigations, determine settlements or impose sanctions on a taxpayer based on documents or evidence seized as a result of a search practiced in the home of third parties, when such documents were considered invalid in a final criminal judgment because they were obtained in violation of fundamental rights, even if the entry and registration has been authorized by a judge. Also, another Supreme Court judgment, this time of 23 September 2021, stated that the tax authorities cannot enter premises without first notifying the beginning of the audit procedure.\footnote{See ES: STS 2982/2021, 14 July 2021, available at https://www.poderjudicial.es/search/TS/openDocument/018f7cf37885acb1/20210727 (accessed 23 Feb. 2022); and ES: STS 3502/2021, 23 Sept. 2021, available at https://www.poderjudicial.es/search/TS/openDocument/36fc512f06556163/20211011 (accessed 23 Feb. 2022). Best practice: Access to bank information should require judicial authorization.

Shifted away from the best practice:
The downward trend in judicial protection of bank secrecy continued in 2021, with renewed vigour.

In Bolivia, the “large” wealth tax law (Ley de Impuesto a las Grandes Fortunas) mentioned in section 3.2 of this yearbook allows the tax authorities, when investigating the source of fortunes in money laundering cases, to request a taxpayer’s bank information directly from the financial entities instead of through the regulatory authority, which is otherwise the standard.371

Finally, the introduction of financial institution notices in the United Kingdom, mentioned several times throughout this yearbook, enables an authorized officer to require a financial institution to provide information or documents about a taxpayer, in most cases without the need to seek the taxpayer’s consent or authorization from a tribunal.372

Best practice: Authorization by the judiciary should be necessary for the interception of telephone communications and monitoring of online activity. Specialized offices within the judiciary should be established to supervise these actions.

The seizure of documents is subject to extensive regulation in Letter No. 12 of the Internal Revenue Service of Chile (as mentioned several times in this yearbook). The regulation requires the tax authorities to provide sufficient motivation for accessing the documentation and prior notification to the taxpayer of all administrative actions in this regard.373

However, shifting away from the minimum standard, the latest amendment to the Federal Tax Code in Mexico allows the tax authorities to seize bank deposits without prior judicial hearing when a tax assessment has become “due”. However, the Federal Tax Code does not provide a definition of a “due” tax assessment, and in accordance with the general interpretation of various provisions of the Code, a due tax assessment arises when the assessment is not paid. This concept is different from a “final assessment”, where the period to challenge on an administrative stage or via the judiciary, has expired. In practice, this provision is reported to allow the authorities to seize property, including bank accounts, without giving taxpayers an opportunity to be heard.

E-filing, both for the filing of tax returns (as discussed in section 2 of this yearbook) and for the filing of reviews and appeals has received a definite boost as a result of the needs generated by the COVID-19 pandemic.

During 2021, Colombia opted for full digitalization of all tax proceedings (e.g. e-notifications, obligation to email lawsuit to defendant, digital notifications, virtual hearings, e-files) as part of the amendments introduced to the Administrative Procedure Code, which includes specific provisions related to tax litigation procedures, in parallel with a similar regulation for tax administrative procedures.\textsuperscript{376} Such a development has also been implemented in Peru, where Reviews and appeals in tax cases need to be swift to ensure effective tax collection and improve the efficiency of tax systems. At the same time, speedy procedures are part of taxpayers’ right to certainty about their tax liability, and achieving this in practice can be difficult. Indeed, 2021 has been a year of highs and lows: the pandemic has raised awareness of the need for faster responses, and action has been taken in this regard, but, at the same time, it has presented challenges that are not easily solvable.

Going towards the fulfilment of the best practice, the diminishing effects of the COVID-19 pandemic in Colombia allowed the DIAN to lift the suspension of administrative terms decreed due to the quarantine measures adopted by the government.379 The specific measures introduced during the pandemic in Lithuania have been reported to encourage faster dispute resolution (e.g. remote hearings, more efficient written procedures, wider use of electronic means), although exceptional cases may still exceed 2 years.380

Also, in Denmark, after an investigation was launched in 2016 following scrutiny of the lengthy appeal process of the Danish Tax Appeals Agency, 2021 has finally reported shorter average times. At the same time, the National Audit Office criticized the declining productivity of the Danish Tax Appeals Agency since the costs of handling tax appeals have increased.381

380 See LT: Law on Tax Administration (16 June 2005), available at https://e-seimas.lt/portal/legalAct/lT/TAD/TAIS.2765497/jftlid=q888l3sArticle (accessed 7 Mar. 2022). The reported statements are based mostly on practical experience. The COVID-19 pandemic encouraged tax authorities to use other opportunities in practice, which turned out to be more efficient, as reported. See also LT: OPTR Report (Taxpayers/Tax Practitioners, Law Firm), Questionnaire 2, Question 51.

due to the situation provoked by the pandemic, Ecuador suspended the deadlines in tax administrative procedures and the statute of limitations on tax collection procedures from 26 April until 20 May 2021.\(^{382}\)

Shifting away from the best practice, Bolivia reports that judicial appeals are over 6 years long in practice.\(^{383}\) Reviews and appeals may take over 5 years in Guatemala, and it can take more than 15 years in courts, according to reports.\(^{384}\) In Brazil, most second-tier federal administrative proceedings have been suspended for the last few years, resulting in longer proceedings.\(^{385}\)

6.3. Alternative dispute resolution

Tax assessment conflicts between tax administrations and taxpayers are inevitable, despite both parties’ best efforts. Even with a good administration where good faith governs the relationship between taxpayers and authorities, alternative dispute resolution (ADR) can be necessary to resolve conflicts efficiently. In the end, this provides certainty for both parties and offers the possibility to provide better results in terms of tax policy.

Although few, some positive developments are reported in the field, hand in hand with digitization and the needs arising from the COVID-19 pandemic.

The United Nations Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters has approved Chapter 1 of the Handbook on Dispute Avoidance and Resolution, resulting in the approval of the entire Handbook. The document is divided into two parts: Part 1 has a broad focus and deals with mechanisms for avoiding and resolving tax disputes that could arise in a purely domestic context and cross-border tax disputes (including those related to the application of tax treaties). Part 2 focuses exclusively on the mutual agreement procedure, which is included in tax treaties and enables certain tax officials of the treaty countries to resolve bilaterally cross-border issues related to the application or interpretation of treaty provisions, including possible resolutions of disputes via binding arbitration and possible ways to improve the dispute avoidance and resolution procedure (e.g. capacity building through

The OECD reports that the Georgia Revenue Service (GRS) introduced remote, electronic tax dispute hearings during which taxpayers were offered the chance to have a remote hearing for their ongoing disputes. This option was further embedded when taxpayers had the possibility to indicate in advance their willingness to participate in a remote hearing for future disputes.

dispute resolution proceedings. The GRS decided to build a system using a video-conferencing platform that allowed taxpayers to connect both via computer and phone. Taxpayers receive reminders of hearings through their personalized websites as well as via SMS, which also provides detailed instructions on how to use the platform. The e-hearing system has now been incorporated into the tax code of Georgia, meaning that it will be maintained after the pandemic is over. 387

In Mexico, the rules regulating the so-called acuerdos conclusivos (conclusive agreements) were modified with the aim of speeding up the procedures by establishing maximum limitations to their duration. Consequently, the Guidelines regulating the exercise of the substantive powers of the Tax Ombudsman (Procuraduría de la Defensa del Contribuyente) were modified to reflect the body’s adjustments to the new legal deadlines. 388

Meanwhile, in an interesting development regarding the enforcement of arbitration awards, the United Kingdom’s energy corporation Cairn Energy PLC filed a petition in a US district court to confirm a foreign arbitration award under the United Nations Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards that arose from an investment dispute regarding a retroactive tax assessment by the government of India against Cairn Energy. At the same time, the company secured a court order in France to seize some 20 government properties in Paris to recover a part of the award. The petition was dropped in early 2022, in exchange for a tax refund of approximately INR 79 billion (around USD 1.06 billion). 389

Malawi enacted a new tax administration bill, the primary focus of which is to provide (to the greatest extent practicable) a common set of simplified rules for administration of written tax laws with the aim of promoting a business approach to tax administration. 390

2021 Relevant Communicated Cases – European Court of Human Rights
Case 1:
Ekklisia tis Ellados v. Greece, No. 44547/15

Date: 23 June 2021
ECHR Articles: Article 6(1)
Facts:
A domestic law provision provides that a lawsuit before the civil courts concerning rights on real property is inadmissible if the taxpayer filing the lawsuit does not submit before the civil court the tax declaration in which the real property that is the subject of the lawsuit is declared (and based on which real estate tax is due every year).
The taxpayer has not included the real property that is the subject of the lawsuit in such a tax return, as this would require it to pay an annual real property tax of EUR 95,700; accordingly, the lawsuit was dismissed as inadmissible. The taxpayer complained that this requirement is in breach of his right of access to a court.

Case 2:
OOO Ganesh v. Russia, No. 12372/20

Date: 4 October 2021
ECHR Articles: Article 6(1)
Facts:
The application concerns the right of access to a court. The applicant company has brought a legal action against an individual. In view of its difficult financial situation, she requested a period of payment of a judicial tax that she had to pay, in accordance with the tax code. The court rejected this application on the grounds that the requesting company had real estate that it was leasing. The complainant objected, explaining that she did not derive any income from it. The decision was upheld by the courts of three levels of jurisdiction. The requesting company considers that the refusal to enlist its application has infringed its right to access a court guaranteed by article 6 of the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR).

The only reported development in this regard happened in Portugal, where a new provision (Law 7/2021, of 26 February) entails that guarantees provided to suspend tax enforcement procedures may expire, upon request, if the judicial appeal is not decided within 4 years.

6.6. Costs of proceedings

Positive developments in this area have been reported in Australia, where the ATO will pay the reasonable costs for the taxpayer to engage external legal representation in disputes within the Small Business Tax Division of the Administrative Appeals Tribunal, if the taxpayer is self-represented and the ATO engages external legal representation.\footnote{See AU: OPTR Report ((Tax) Ombudsman, Academia), Questionnaire 2, Question 54.}

Also, a best practice in this area is reported from Australia, where disputes about the ATO decisions or the manner in which it has dealt with the taxpayer’s claims in relation to litigation funding may be raised with the Inspector-General of Taxation and Taxation Ombudsman (IGTO). From July to October each year, the ATO Tax Help Program assists eligible taxpayers in lodging or amending returns. This free program was extended until the end of November 2021 to further assist those impacted by the COVID-19 pandemic. Assistance through this program was available in person, over the phone or online. In addition, in 2019, a pilot of tax clinics (operated in conjunction with several Australian universities) was undertaken. The clinics provide tax advice and representation for vulnerable taxpayers and those who cannot afford to obtain those services. The success of the pilot led the government to extend funding of the program for an additional 4 years. The ATO has been tasked with providing the funding for the universities through an open competitive grant process. Under the program, students studying tax-related courses provide free tax advice and support under the supervision of qualified clinic managers. Sessions are offered via phone or web conferencing, as well as in person at some locations. The ATO does not have any input into how each university runs its tax clinic.\footnote{See AU: ATO Tax Help Program, available at https://www.ato.gov.au/Individuals/Your-tax-return/Help-and-support-to-lodge-your-tax-return/Tax-Help-program/ (accessed 24 Feb. 2022); and ATO, National Tax Clinic open competitive grant program (8 Jan. 2021), available at https://www.ato.gov.au/General/Gen/Consultation-paper--National-Tax-Clinic-open-competitive-grant-program/ (accessed 24 Feb. 2022). By investigating facts and circumstances relevant for tax purposes, the administration will inevitably discuss matters of considerable sensitivity to the taxpayers. This is, in itself, an invasion of their affairs and – if not handled properly – this activity may even affect the taxpayers’ right to privacy and their freedom of establishment by revealing delicate information or industrial secrets (as addressed in section 3 of this yearbook).

No developments were reported regarding this best practice in 2021, probably as the digitalization of judicial proceedings (as discussed in section 6.1 of this yearbook) forced all court sessions to be somewhat private.

6.8. Publication of judgments and privacy

Minimum standard: Tax judgments should be published.

Shifting towards/improved the minimum standard: Chile

Shifting away from the minimum standard: Uruguay

For transparency and certainty, awareness of how the tax rules are interpreted and applied in practice is pivotal. As part of this, the publication of tax judgements is an important measure to provide clarity for taxpayers and decrease disputes with the tax administration as a result.

At the same time, taxpayers are entitled to privacy and, as stated above, the publication of rulings without proper caution of the sensitive information contained in them may have severe adverse effects for the taxpayers. Therefore, ensuring taxpayers' privacy should equally be protected by a minimum standard.

Chile has continued its positive development towards this minimum standard from previous years, as discussed several times throughout this yearbook. The Servicio de Impuestos Internos Letter No. 12 expressly provides for the mandatory publicity of all judicial decisions.

Facts Under Bulgarian law, for an act of not having registered the sale of goods and not having recorded it by issuing a document evidencing the sale, administrative proceedings for the ordering of a coercive administrative measure and administrative penalty proceedings for the imposition of an assets penalty may be brought against the same person in a cumulative manner. Legislation does not impose on the authorities competent for conducting the two sets of proceedings and on the courts the obligation to ensure the effective application of the principle of proportionality with regard to the overall severity of all the cumulated measures in relation to the seriousness of the specific offence at the same time.

Questions The issue here is whether the imposition on a taxable person who failed to issue invoices the sealing of business premises, together with administrative penalty, is proportionate. Although not included in the questions referred by the national court, the issue could also be examined under article 16 of the Charter protecting the freedom to conduct a business, considering article 52(1) on the proportionality and legality of any limitations imposed.

Facts

In the course of the joint investigation carried out by police and customs authorities, it was found that the applicant had installed a hose through which alcohol was carried into a container located near the fence surrounding the production tax warehouse. Following the inspection, two simultaneous sets of proceedings were initiated against the company Dual Prod SRL, both of which exclusively concerned the facts, without any formal charge being made against the possible perpetrators.

On 5 September 2018, the customs authorities officially suspended the applicant's authorization as a tax warehouse-keeper for a period of 12 months, taking the view that the existence of evidence of criminal offences was sufficient for that administrative penalty to be imposed. Following the applicant's appeal against that measure, the Court of Appeal, Oradea, reduced the penalty from 12 to 8 months, finding the maximum penalty to be disproportionate. The applicant fully complied with the 8-month suspension.

On 21 October 2020, the applicant was formally charged in the criminal proceedings and consequently, on 19 November 2020, the customs authorities imposed the same administrative penalty again, in respect of the same facts, suspending the applicant's authorization as a tax warehouse-keeper for an indefinite period pending the final outcome of the criminal proceedings.

European Union is to be interpreted as meaning the following: It does not preclude national legislation which permits the duplication of administrative and criminal proceedings and penalties in situations defined on the basis of clear and precise criteria that are laid down by law and properly defined by case law. It precludes national legislation which does not make it possible to ensure the required proportionality between the seriousness of the offence, on the one hand, and the severity of all the combined penalties, on the other, whether they be financial administrative penalties of a substantively criminal nature or prison sentences.

Facts

On 9 October 2020, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights received a request for precautionary measures urging it to require that the state of Nicaragua adopt protective measures to guarantee the rights of Mr Mariano Valle Peters.

According to such a request, Mr Valle Peters is the owner of a corporation, parent company of Channel 12, a television station that

Decision

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights decided to ask the state of Nicaragua to guarantee that Mr Valle Peters could continue exercising his right to freedom of expression. Particularly, the state was requested to refrain from carrying out the decision to sell the seized assets.

Comments

Freedom of expression has an individual and social dimension, which not only recognizes the right of each person to express his or her thoughts, ideas and information through any appropriate means of dissemination, but also that of society to be well informed.

The proceeding referred above (aimed at the potential closure or forced sale of Channel 12 on opposes the Nicaraguan government. He also is responsible for the general editorial line of Channel 12.

The applicant indicated that on 30 September 2020, in order to collect alleged taxes owed by the corporation, a Nicaraguan court upheld a government action to freeze and confiscate the Channel 12 bank account, as well as to seize and sell its television antenna, other assets and Mr Valle Peters’ home and personal vehicles.

As part of his defence, Mr Valle Peters alleged that his taxes were duly paid and that the government’s calculations were clearly wrong. Furthermore, it was alleged that the amounts claimed by the government were much lower than the value of the properties seized and ordered to be sold.

The request for precautionary measures filed with the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights stated that it could be a matter of days before the properties of the television station and its owner were to be sold, which would violate Mr Valle Peters’ freedom of expression, exercised through the media.

The applicant sought to have the precautionary measures granted, considering that the tax assessment and court orders constituted indirect violations of freedom of expression. The above, since the assessments and tax orders against Channel 12 would have been performed in violation of due process, would not pursue a legitimate purpose and would be disproportionate.

situation of serious and urgent irreparable damage was sufficiently established in the case submitted by Mr Valle Peters.

Indeed, the Commission emphasized that Mr Mariano Valle Peters was facing serious difficulties in exercising his right to freedom of expression, because of his role within the television medium and within the current context of Nicaragua.

In the opinion of the Commission, such a situation would likely have an effect not only on his peers (journalists and social communicators) but also on any other person with an interest in reporting on issues of public relevance in a country facing a critical situation.

The Commission highlighted the relevance of the context when evaluating requests for precautionary measures. In this regard, the Commission stressed that the facts alleged by Mariano Valle Peters were framed in a context of repression of independent journalistic activity in Nicaragua. The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights once again called attention to the continuity of the repression in Nicaragua and the closure of democratic spaces that characterizes the human rights crisis that persists in such a country.

The drift towards the expansion of punitive tax law continued apace in 2021. There was a notable trend towards a significant increase in tax penalties in the period, sometimes in excess of proportionality. At the same time, the concurrence of criminal and administrative sanctions in respect of substantially identical facts has been strengthened through rules and jurisprudential interpretations that ratify the ontological difference between one and the other type of sanctions, where the only remedy to the non bis in idem seems to be the proportionality of the concurrently applicable sanctions.\(^\text{407}\)

A very good example is the new Tax Collection Act of Chinese Taipei, which goes in both directions. On the one hand, the applicable fine for tax evasion by fraud or any other unrighteous means has been significantly increased from TWD 60,000 (approximately EUR 1,902) to TWD 10 million (approximately EUR 317,000). Moreover, if a business enterprise has a tax shortfall exceeding TWD 50 million (approximately EUR 1.585 million), the criminal charge increases and becomes imprisonment ranging from 1 year to 7 years, plus a fine ranging from TWD 10 million to TWD 100 million (approximately EUR 3.17 million). Also, the criminal charge for instigating or aiding tax evasion by deceit or improper methods is imprisonment of up to 3 years with a penalty increase from a maximum of TWD 60,000 to a maximum of TWD 1 million (approximately EUR 31,700). Contrary to the previous legislation, the amendment no longer allows companies to avoid imprisonment by paying the fine. On the other hand, the new Tax Collection Act of Chinese Taipei is reported to have strengthened the applicability of non bis in idem between tax penalties and tax fines.408

Iceland enacted legislation granting the tax authorities the power to issue a penalty for failure by taxpayers to document, in whole or in part, transfer pricing transactions with related parties of up to ISK 3 million (approximately EUR 21,100) for each financial year for which they failed to comply with transfer pricing documentation requirements. Such penalty can be reduced to ISK 1.5 million (approximately EUR 10,550) if insufficient documentation was provided but taxpayers made the improvements required by the revenue and customs authorities within 45 days. Penalties may apply for a maximum of 6 financial years and not exceed ISK 6 million (approximately EUR 42,250).409 In Malta, Act VIII of 2021 clarifies that, in certain circumstances, taxpayers found guilty of tax evasion will receive a fine, further clarifying that such penalties will be regarded as criminal in nature.410

The United Arab Emirates increased the penalties applicable to VAT and excise taxes.411

Turkey enacted new legislation criminalizing four offences relating to the integrity of documentation and/or the systems for storing and processing information relevant to tax purposes. Pursuant to the new law, these conduct are punishable by imprisonment between 3 years and 5 years. It is worrisome that the new law allows for the imposition of the incarceration penalties just mentioned in cases where the tax audit in which the material element of these new offences would have been established is still ongoing.412

Uganda enacted new legislation increasing the pecuniary and imprisonment penalties for various tax offences by up to five times.413

With regard to surcharges, a concept that walks between penalties as such and civil compensation,414 foreign businesses selling cross-border electronic services to individuals in Chinese Taipei that failed to timely e-file required income tax returns for 2020 by 30 June 2021 were subject to delinquent reporting surcharges of 10% of the assessed tax, with a maximum of TWD 30,000 (approximately USD 1,074), according to an announcement from the tax authorities.415

An interesting case that merits follow-up, the Administrative Court in Blagoevgrad, Bulgaria (Administrativen sad Blagoevgrad) asked the ECJ for a preliminary ruling on whether the sealing of business premises together with an administrative penalty is proportionate for failing to issue an invoice.416 In parallel, AG Rantos delivered his opinion in the Viva Telecom Bulgaria EOOD case and concluded that the right to an effective remedy (as provided for in article 47 of the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights) does not apply to a prosecution in Bulgaria for obtaining or granting credit at an interest rate that deviates from the market rate at the time of the conclusion of the transaction, including interest-free loans, as long as these...

There have been several developments regarding proportionality of penalties and surcharges in the United States.

Maryland established the first state whistle-blower reward program in the country to crack down on tax frauds. Hawaii enacted new legislation that imposes penalties on employers for wilful failure to furnish wage and tax statements to employees by the due date, as well as late filings or non-filings of wage and tax statements with the state’s Department of Taxation.\(^{423}\)

California waived property tax delinquency penalties, costs and other related charges resulting from a documented COVID-19-related hardship. Taxpayers qualify for the waiver if the auditor or tax collector finds that the taxpayer failed to timely pay due to a documented hardship arising from a shelter-in-place order (i.e. an order issued by the governor or local health officer requiring all persons to remain in their place of residence, except for essential activities), and if the taxpayer pays the principal tax due no later than 30 June of the fiscal year when payment first became delinquent.\(^{424}\)

However, some developments during the period served to counteract the expansionary trend discussed earlier in this section.

In Brazil, following its case law in the matter, the Federal Administrative Council of Tax Appeals (Conselho Administrativo de Recursos Fiscais) declared inadmissible the tax authorities’ claim to punish concurrently the non-payment of monthly advance payments and the final corporate tax debt of the same taxpayer, as it violated the guarantee of substantive non bis in idem.\(^{425}\)

For its part, the tax authorities of Greece clarified that no fines will be imposed in case of non-compliance with its online platform for electronic invoicing (myDATA) obligations, also comprising any irregularities related to any overdue or inaccurate submissions made for 2021.\(^{426}\)

Portugal incorporated a rule into its legislation according to which potential tax penalties are automatically waived if, in the preceding 5 years, the taxpayer has neither been convicted of any tax infraction nor availed of a reduction or waiver of tax penalties.427

Likewise, the Gradual Regime that allows the reduction of administrative penalties by defined percentages based on voluntary regularization opportunities in Peru has been extended, due to the situation generated by the COVID-19 pandemic.428

In the Netherlands, a decree ensures that individual income tax returns filed after 1 May 2021, but before 8 May 2021, will not attract penalty interest if the final assessment is identical to the filed return, as a consequence of a technical error on the platform that prevented tax returns to be filed. In order to prevent compliant taxpayers from being unintentionally penalized due to the extension, the decree ensures that no tax interest is due where (i) the tax return is submitted after 1 May but before 8 May 2021; and (ii) the final assessment is identical to the filed return.429

As a natural consequence of the expansion discussed earlier in this section, there appears to be an increase in criminal prosecutions and penalties imposed for tax fraud and related offences (e.g. money laundering) in 2021, along with the creation of new organizational structures for the investigation of tax offences.

The ECtHR upheld the compatibility of the criminal conviction imposed by Luxembourg on LuxLeaks whistle-blower Raphaël Halet with the ECHR. The Court found that the conviction to a criminal fine of EUR 1,000 and a symbolic compensation of EUR 1 to PwC for non-pecuniary damage does not infringe the applicant’s freedom of expression, as it considered that the disclosure of documents that were subject to professional secrecy had caused harm to his employer since it resulted in damage to the firm’s reputation and the loss of client confidence that outweighed the general interest. Regarding proportionality, the court pointed out that the domestic courts had taken the disinterested nature of the applicant’s actions into consideration as a mitigating factor. Therefore, it had imposed a modest penalty that would not have a big effect on the exercise of the applicant’s freedom or that of other employees.431

430 See sec. 3.14.

On the other hand, the ECJ ruled that in the determination of the taxable amount of a transaction concealed by taxable persons for VAT purposes, the amounts paid and received as reconstituted by the tax authority must be regarded as already including VAT, therefore influencing the amount of evaded taxes that may serve as basis for criminal penalties.432

In addition, in a landmark decision, the ECJ declared disproportionate the regulation of Spain that includes presumptively in the tax base of assets and rights situated abroad in respect of which their existence has not been declared (or has been declared late) without any practical possibility of invoking the statute of limitations and, above all, the application to those cases of a proportional fine of 150% of the tax calculated on that basis together with the flat-rate fines, the amount of which is, says the court, disproportionate to the penalties imposed for similar infringements in a purely domestic context and the total amount of which is unlimited.433

In Germany, the Federal Court of Justice (Bundesgerichtshof) upheld the previous decision of the Regional Court of Bonn (Landgericht Bonn) that found two defendants guilty of tax evasion on the subject of “cum-ex trades”. These structures involved trades made around the dividend record date, pursuant to which entitlement to the dividend payment is stripped from the stock. In the past, structures were set up that resulted in double or multiple refunds of German withholding tax, resulting in Germany losing billions in tax revenue. The discussion on the subject focused on the question of whether such transactions were to be considered abusive. While it has been argued that such transactions were abusive, it has also been argued that beneficiaries simply exploited a failure in the German withholding tax system until the legal loophole was closed.434

A major case broke in Italy, where the Guardia di Finanza (Financial Police) accused a multinational online travel company based in the Netherlands of evading payment of EUR 153 million in VAT between 2013 and 2019. According to the report, “the Dutch company issued invoices without VAT, applying the ‘reverse charge’ mechanism even in cases where the accommodation facility lacked the relevant [VAT] registration number, with the result that the tax was not declared or paid in Italy”.435

Also in Italy, thanks to the cooperation of the authorities of Bulgaria, the Czech Republic and Germany, the authorities dismantled a VAT carousel fraud scheme that involved the import of cars from Germany and resulted in VAT underpayments of at least EUR 6.3 million.

In Spain, the Supreme Court has declared it appropriate to initiate the enforcement process for joint and several liability of third parties before the act imposing the penalties on the taxpayer becomes final. According to the court, there is no legal impediment to transfer to the person declared jointly and severally liable a penalty that has not become final in administrative proceedings because it has been challenged and, therefore, automatically suspended, without prejudice to the fact that the penalty cannot be enforced and must continue to be suspended until it becomes final in administrative proceedings. In cases in which an appeal for reconsideration or any other legally appropriate appeal is lodged against the decision imposing the sanction, the enforcement period shall begin with the finality of the sanction in administrative proceedings, which shall be determined by the body competent to issue the decision assigning liability.\textsuperscript{437}

For its part, the United Kingdom Upper Tribunal (Tax and Chancery Chamber) approved a reduced penalty imposed by Her Majesty’s Revenue and Customs on a company making use of a stamp duty land tax avoidance scheme. The reduced penalty was imposed due to the company’s failure to take any “necessary corrective action” after notice was provided.\textsuperscript{438}

There have been many developments in this regard in the United States. First, two bank executives were charged for their role in a massive money laundering scheme of over USD 170 million through the US financial system involving Odebrecht S.A., a Brazil-based global construction conglomerate. Odebrecht falsely recorded hundreds of millions of US dollars in international wire transfers sent to a bank in Antigua directed by the indicted as legitimate business expenses and deducted the fraudulent payments from the overall profits that it reported in Brazil. This enabled Odebrecht to evade more than USD 100 million in taxes in the latter country.\textsuperscript{439}

The United States’ Department of Justice also charged Switzerland’s largest insurance company and its three subsidiaries for allegedly conspiring with US taxpayers for US tax fraud.

The Swiss insurance companies assisted US taxpayers in concealing from the IRS more than USD 1.452 billion in offshore insurance policies and related policy investment accounts in banks around the world, as well as the income generated in those accounts.440

The United States Attorney’s Office for the Southern District of New York signed a non-prosecution agreement with a bank from Bermuda, which agreed to pay USD 5.6 million to the United States for assisting US taxpayer clients in opening and maintaining undeclared foreign bank accounts from 2001 through 2013. The bank admitted to helping its clients conceal their ownership of foreign bank accounts to avoid their US tax obligations. The bank allowed its US clients to use sham entities that assisted those US clients in funnelling money between accounts based in the United States and the Cayman Islands.441

Several US courts have held proportionate the application of the 50% maximum penalty against taxpayers for willful failure to file a timely Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts (FBAR), since it represents a careless disregard of a known or obvious risk, as well as violation of a known legal duty.442 Another court sentenced a Florida resident for his failure to report foreign financial accounts and for evading millions of US dollars in taxes on income earned in accounts held in several countries. The taxpayer will serve 24 months of imprisonment, along with 2 years of supervised release, and pay approximately USD 2,789,538 in restitution to the Treasury.443 In addition, a few indictments have been issued against US residents for allegedly failing to file FBARs and filing false documents with the IRS.444

In addition, the United States' Tax Court has held that a taxpayer’s filing of income tax returns did not trigger the statute of limitations for tax assessment by the IRS if the taxpayer fraudulently underreported his income on an FBAR form with the intent to evade tax, a decision that seems to call into question the proportionality of criminal prosecution for tax offences. In this way, the statute of limitations is inapplicable, in practice, to this tax offence.\footnote{See US: USTC, 26 July 2021, Memo. 2021-95, Docket No. 135331-18, George S. Harrington v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, available at https://bit.ly/3oHpnc8 (accessed 11 Feb. 2022). See also W. Choi, US Tax Court Denies Limitation Periods for Fraudulent Tax Returns (28 July 2021), News IBFD.}

In what may be considered a setback, the United States' District Court for the Southern District of Texas, Houston Division, held that civil penalties assessed for a taxpayer’s non-wilful failure to file FBARs are remedial in nature and, thus, the US government’s lawsuit for collecting the penalties survive the death of the taxpayer. The Court then held that FBAR penalties are primarily remedial because the penalties are paid, at least in part, to cover the costs that the US government must pay to investigate undisclosed accounts, and ambiguities in the law, which made this issue a close call, must be resolved in favour of the plaintiff (i.e. the US government).\footnote{See US: USDC, Texas Southern District, 30 June 2021, United States of America v. Amarij Gill, Civil Action H-18-4020, available at https://www.govinfo.gov/content/pkg/USCOURTS-txsd-4_18-cv-04020/pdf/USCOURTS-txsd-4_18-cv-04020-0.pdf (accessed 16 Feb. 2022).}

An interesting cross-border case also deserves mention from the United States, which concerns civil damages for tax offences. The US District Court for the Southern District of New York declined to dismiss an action that the tax authority of Denmark (SKAT) filed against a US pension plan and its sole participant for damages based on their fraudulent Danish tax refund claims. The court concluded that the action is not barred by either the statute of limitations or the revenue rule and that the SKAT’s fraud allegations are enough to proceed with the trial.\footnote{See US: 30 June 2021, In re SKAT Tax Refund Scheme Litigation, 18-md-2865 (LAK), available at https://www.leagle.com/decision/infdco20201224734 (accessed 11 Feb. 2022). See also W. Choi, US District Court Declines to Dismiss Danish Tax Authority’s Tax Fraud Suit (6 July 2021), News IBFD.}

In addition, the United States' Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has held that a US person that is both the sole owner and the beneficiary of a foreign trust and fails to timely report distributions received from the trust is subject to a 35% penalty for foreign trust beneficiaries, regardless of whether a 5% penalty for foreign trust owners applies. A writ of certiorari has been granted to the taxpayer before the Supreme Court, on the grounds of legitimate expectations regarding the previous IRS qualification of the conduct as punishable under a 5% penalty only.\footnote{See US: Court of Appeals 2 Circuit, 28 July 2021, Docket No. 20-603, Emily S. Cooperation between tax and criminal investigation bodies has also shown some developments in 2021. The United States' IRS Criminal Investigation Division and the tax authority of South Africa reached an agreement to fight tax and economic crimes affecting... both countries. They will work together to identify, investigate and bring to justice criminals with a nexus to both countries who have committed, among other crimes, international public corruption, cyber fraud and money laundering. The newly formed partnership has already uncovered emerging schemes perpetrated by promoters, professional enablers and financial institutions.\[449\]

For its part, Bahrain established a tax crime unit that specializes in tax evasion crimes to investigate criminal offences covered under VAT law.\[450\]

Finally, the United States released internal instructions for IRS personnel explaining penalties imposed on taxpayers who fail to disclose reportable transactions.\[451\]

7.2. Voluntary disclosure

As a counterbalance to the expansion that characterized criminal and administrative sanctions (as indicated in section 7.1) that, in a way, seems to go against the minimum standard according to which sanctions should not be increased simply to encourage taxpayers to make voluntary disclosures, voluntary disclosure regimes flourished in 2021, apparently due to the lengthening of the effects of the COVID-19 pandemic.

Starting in 2021, taxpayers who have lawsuits pending in Brazil related to the collection of social security contributions and contributions to other entities and funds levied on profit sharing may benefit from an agreement for special payment, with reduced penalties, provided by the Special Secretary of the Brazilian Federal Revenue Service and the Attorney-General’s Office of the National Treasury. Under these agreements, taxpayers may pay up their debts with a reduction of up to 50% of the principal amount. The agreement provides three schemes of payment to be chosen by the taxpayer but, in all schemes, the minimum amount of the

In \textbf{Chile}, the Servicio de Impuestos Internos issued Letter No. 41/2021, in which the tax authorities further develop the rules of the Tax Code regarding, among other things, the facilitation of tax compliance and taxpayer control. Regarding sanctions, the Letter orders the tax authorities not to apply any sanctions to those taxpayers not complying with a few measures to facilitate tax compliance, so-called “preventive and cooperative”. Such measures include the issuance of notifications for taxpayers in early stages of assessments to address differences in the views of taxpayers and tax authorities. In addition, in the case of taxes subject to self-assessment, if the taxpayer or person liable for the taxes voluntarily files an omitted declaration or submits a supplementary declaration that results in higher taxes, the corresponding punitive interest will be remitted. All in all, the collaboration of taxpayers is acknowledged in order to cancel, reduce or suspend penalties.\footnote{See CL: Circular No. 41, Imparte instrucciones sobre modificaciones introducidas por la Ley N° 21.210 al Código Tributario, en relación con las normas que regulan la relación de los contribuyentes con el Servicio de}
The Dominican Republic’s voluntary disclosure regime, reinstated in 2021, seeks to create the conditions for taxpayers to voluntarily disclose all of their undeclared movable and immovable assets to the Directorate General of Internal Taxes (DGII), as well as to revalue them according to current market prices. The regime reduces taxes over the disclosed assets to a one-off tax of 2% of their market value. The regime was extended until December 2021.455

To provide relief to small and medium-sized taxpayers and encourage them to file pending GST returns, India has rationalized the late fees for failure to furnish various GST forms within the period prescribed under the Central Goods and Services Tax (CGST) Act and introduced an amnesty scheme for pending Form GSTR-3B for the period July 2017 to April 2021.456

In Spain, a decision of the Central Economic-Administrative Court (Tribunal Económico-Administrativo Central) deemed appropriate to maintain the 25% reduction in the penalties imposed for late payment when the interested parties request and obtain a deferment or payment in instalments, in those cases in which such deferments or payment in instalments are exempt from the obligation to provide a guarantee, i.e. because the person liable for payment does not have sufficient assets to guarantee the debt and the enforcement of their assets could substantially affect the maintenance of the productive capacity and the level of employment of the respective economic activity or could cause serious losses to the interests of the Public Treasury. In addition, Law 11/2021 of July 9, on prevention and anti-fraud measures, introduces greater reductions in the sanction in cases of agreement and voluntary payment.457

While increasing the penalties applicable to VAT and excise taxes (as commented in section 7.1), the United Arab Emirates reduced the penalties due but not yet paid to 30% of the total unpaid penalties, provided that all of the following conditions are met: (i) the penalties were applied under the previous Cabinet Resolution no. 40/2017; (ii) the registrant will have paid all taxes due by 31 December 2021; and (iii) by 31 December 2021, the registrant will have paid 30% of the total administrative penalties due but unpaid as at the effective date of the Resolution.\textsuperscript{460}

In the United States, the accuracy penalty on an original tax return can be avoided through disclosure. Voluntary disclosure may not help in all cases, though, particularly where the original return is incorrect. The IRS Criminal Investigation Voluntary Disclosure program is not available if the IRS had third party information on the non-compliance before the voluntary disclosure.\textsuperscript{461}

In 2021, the IRS issued Notice N-2021-39, establishing the conditions for penalty relief in cases of failure to (i) file or show information on partnership returns; (ii) file or show information on an S corporation return; (iii) file correct information returns; or (iv) furnish correct payee statements for pass-through entities. Particularly, the Department of Treasury of Michigan (\textit{United States}) has offered filing and payment options for delinquent individual taxpayers and individuals who simply missed the extended 2020 state tax filing deadline, including penalty waivers if taxpayers can show reasonable cause for their untimely payment; monthly instalment payments over 48 months or less; and compromise requests (i.e. an application formally requesting that the Department lower a taxpayer's assessed tax liability).\textsuperscript{463}

Also in the \textit{United States}, New Jersey announced its Combined Reporting Initiative, allowing companies with New Jersey nexus that have been included in a combined return in tax years on or after 2019, but otherwise failed to file as a separate entity for tax years prior to 2019, to voluntarily come forward and comply with corporate tax filing requirements without penalties, even when these taxpayers are not eligible for a standard voluntary disclosure agreement.\textsuperscript{464}

Further, Louisiana’s Department of Revenue proposed regulation for taxpayers seeking good faith abatements on negligence and wilful disregard penalties.\textsuperscript{465}

In addition, in the \textit{United States}, Indiana waived penalties and interest on state and local tax underpayments directly, or indirectly, resulting from the state’s new treatment of unemployment compensation earned in 2020 between 1 July and 30 September 2021.\textsuperscript{466}

To conclude the recounting of voluntary disclosure measures within the \textit{United States}, the state of Washington extended waived and suspended statutes related to tax penalties, fees, interest and due dates until September 2021. Since March, the governor’s proclamations provided tax relief to Washington taxpayers suffering from the negative effects of the COVID-19 pandemic. The relief applies to a variety of taxes and fees, including property taxes, certain excise taxes and business license fees.\textsuperscript{467}

For their part, several countries resorted to voluntary disclosure with reduced or waived penalties as a mechanism to clean up fiscal accounts and facilitate tax compliance, based on the situation generated by the COVID-19 pandemic.

Cyprus waived all administrative fines on overdue DAC6 information submissions if submitted by 30 June 2021. Later this lapse was extended until 31 January 2022. Moreover, the Registrar of Companies announced that it will not impose penalties for payments of annual company levies made after the deadline of 30 June 2021, provided that such payments are settled by 31 December 2021 at the latest.468

Kosovo waived penalties on companies and individuals for late payment of taxes and interest made by 30 June 2021 at the latest.469

Panama extended the tax amnesty period for the third time, until 31 August 2021, in an effort to provide relief to taxpayers during the COVID-19 pandemic. Also, an amnesty regime was introduced that covers debts owed to the Social Security Authority (Caja de Seguro Social, CSS). Law 215 of 2021 was introduced as a response to the adverse effects of the COVID-19 pandemic on the country’s economy. The Law grants to individuals and legal entities a 100% waiver on late payment interest and fines, if at least 50% of the outstanding balance owed to the CSS is paid within 24 months of the Law’s entry into force.470

In addition, Paraguay suspended until 31 August 2021 the application of the penalty for the late filing of the tax on dividends and profits informative affidavit.471

In Peru, no fines or other sanctions (i.e. closure of establishments) will be imposed on taxpayers subject to the so-called simplified regime (Régimen Único Simplificado) for not filing their income tax return before the deadline, a measure aimed at providing relief to small entrepreneurs and individuals carrying out business activities.472

In the Philippines, Act 11569 has extended until 14 June 2023 the validity of the estate tax amnesty program. It grants taxpayers a one-time opportunity to settle their tax obligations through an estate amnesty program that gives tax relief to estates with outstanding estate tax liabilities.473

The Slovak Republic approved a new regulation that aims to relieve taxpayers from certain tax penalties. No interest on late tax penalties shall be levied if the tax payment due date occurred between 12 March 2020 and 31 December 2020 and the taxpayer makes the relevant tax payment by 30 June 2021 at the latest. Moreover, no penalty shall be levied for late filing of the tax return if the statutory date of filing occurred between 12 March 2020 and 31 December 2020 and the taxpayer makes the relevant filing by 30 June 2021 at the latest. Finally, no penalty shall be levied for taxpayers who declared in their income tax return (filed in the period between 1 January 2020 and 30 September 2020) a higher tax overpayment than it should be (upon the condition that the taxpayer refunds the difference back).474

However, the time for paying deferred VAT is up in the Isle of Man. The tax authorities announced new penalties for taxpayers that either failed to pay their deferred VAT in 2020 or did not agreed on a payment plan by 30 June 2021.475

8. Enforcement of Taxes

Minimum standard: Collection of taxes should never deprive taxpayers of their minimum necessary for living.

In order to provide the necessary financial foundation for a society, efficient tax enforcement is both necessary and key, which entails both an efficient collection of taxes and a balanced protection of the taxpayers. Enforcement entails greater powers for the tax administrations in the collection of taxes due, and the greater the tax administration’s powers, the greater the risks for practices that can potentially be harmful to the taxpayers. Balancing against this power of tax collection for the state is the taxpayer’s human dignity, which limits the state’s power as it ensures the taxpayer the right to a dignified existence (minimum vitale), defined as the minimum necessary for living. Consequently, this is an area in need of strong safeguards.

Coming out of a global pandemic and economic crisis, funds have been scarce for most states for the last 2 years. To mitigate the negative economic consequences of this, many countries have introduced postponements on collecting taxes, reducing interest rates for late payment of taxes, and some extension in due dates for compliance.

These efforts have been continued in 2021 for several countries.

A few countries enacted a bill on measures to support taxpayers during the pandemic, including reduced VAT rates for medical supplies, including Austria, Belgium, Brazil.

476 The CJEU decision (Fifth Chamber) in Case C-95-19, Agenzia delle Dogane v. Silcompa SpA, is a very interesting development in this regard. It prevents the possibility of multiple tax recovery procedures within the EU for the same excise taxes due. As stated by the decision, "In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred is that Article 12(3) of Directive 76/308, read in conjunction with Article 20 of Directive 92/12, must be interpreted as meaning that, in the context of an action disputing enforcement measures taken in the Member State in which the requested authority is situated, the competent body of that Member State may refuse to grant the request to recover excise duties submitted by the competent authority of another Member State in respect of goods which irregularly departed from a suspension arrangement, for the purposes of Article 6(1) of Directive 92/12, where that request is based on the facts relating to the same export transactions which are already subject to excise duty recovery in the Member State in which the requested authority is situated". Argentina also increased the special allowance for employees in a way that monthly salaries of up to ARS 150,000 will accrue no income tax liability.\(^{488}\)

Austria reduced its basic personal income tax rate to 20% for those portions of income from EUR 11,000 to EUR 18,000. This measure will result in a relief of up to EUR 1.6 billion per year for wage and income taxpayers. The reduced tax rate in the amount of 20% applies retroactively from 1 January 2020.\(^{489}\)

The government of Bulgaria proposed a bill introducing amendments to the Personal Income Tax Act to address the demographic crisis and aimed at supporting young people, young families and families with dependants (e.g. children below 18 years). If approved, parents will be able to apply an annual deduction of BGN 6,000 for each child when filing their personal income tax returns. The proposal also includes a measure that would allow employment income of individuals of up to 26 years to be exempt from personal income tax.

Canada extended the temporary amendments to the Income Tax Regulations applicable to Registered Pension Plans and deferred salary leave plans from 2021 through 2022. The initial temporary regulations, which sought to provide relief to participating Canadian workers and their employers amid the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic, were released on 2 July 2020.

In Honduras, the progressive table of income tax is updated each year to account for the inflation to guarantee the minimum necessary for living.

In Lithuania the tax-free income was increased from EUR 400 to EUR 460 from 1 January 2022, to reduce the tax burden on employees with a monthly income of up to a minimum wage.

Moldova reduced the VAT rate applicable to hotel and restaurant services from 12% to 6%.

On the other hand, Slovenia modified the criteria that determine whether taxpayers have suffered a relevant decrease in revenue and added additional criteria related to the number of employees and value of tangible fixed assets. The rules relate to the emergency tax measures adopted in 2020, which consist of salary compensation for the temporary waiting for work and the subsidies for a minimum wage.

The United States provided a safe harbour for taxpayers that received a loan pursuant to the Paycheck Protection Program (PPP) and, based on prior guidance, did not deduct certain otherwise deductible expenses paid or incurred during the taxpayers' taxable year(s) ending after 26 March 2020 and before 1 January 2021 (2020 taxable year). Under the safe harbour, such taxpayers may deduct the expenses in the immediately subsequent taxable year. The Coronavirus Aid, Relief, and Economic Security Act (CARES Act), enacted on 27 March 2020, established the PPP to provide forgivable loans of up to USD 10 million to small businesses.

One surveyed jurisdiction reported a shift away from the best practice, as Mexico has reportedly introduced a measure to allow the tax authorities to seize bank deposits without prior judicial hearing when a tax assessment has become “due”. In addition, the tax code does not provide a definition of what is to be understood as a “due tax assessment”. As described previously, the general interpretations of the Mexican tax code provide that a due tax assessment arises when the assessment is not paid, which is different from a "final assessment" where the period to challenge an administrative stage or via the judiciary, has

For some time now, a controversy has been raging in Spain over the possibility, accepted by the Supreme Court in a 2019 ruling, of the tax administration seizing the minimum wage collected in previous months, which has not been used up in full, and which is being saved little by little in the account of the taxpayer.

As described at the beginning of this section, means have been scarce for several taxpayers for the years 2020-2021, due to the pandemic and the economic crisis resulting from it. Consequently, several countries introduced COVID-specific measures in order to aid the taxpayers, which have been continued in 2021, including extensions of payment of taxes and of deadlines for reporting obligations.

Argentina froze the fixed monthly tax amounts to be paid under the special regime for small taxpayers to the values of December 2020. Also, the tax authorities extended the application of the 95% reduction of social security contributions to be paid by employers providing health care services. Also, in view of the COVID-19 pandemic, the tax authorities extended, from 30 September 2020 to 31 October 2020, the validity of the instalment schemes and interest rates applicable to micro, small and medium enterprises.\(^{499}\)

Australia provided deferral of lodgements and payments and low-interest payment plans, along with support via tax agents - penalty relief for late lodgements and assistance to allow taxpayers to enter flexible payment plans online. Taxpayers with in-progress audits were contacted, either directly or through their agents, and offered assistance including deferrals of audit action with planned call-backs to understand if circumstances had changed, or an extension of time to provide requested materials. What was also provided was assistance to vary future tax instalments without penalty and recognition of the uncertain environment and different income sources particularly for business taxpayers, along with adjustment of debt collection approaches in three phases to enable taxpayers to get back on track.\(^{500}\)

In Belgium, the tax authorities stated that companies that are unable to pay their debts for corporate income tax, withholding tax and VAT on time, can apply for delayed payment of arrears until 30 June 2021, as well as an exemption from interests and/or remission of fines for non-payment of the tax debt. Such a delay was possible at least under certain conditions (proof of “nuisance” experienced as a result of the corona crisis, no structural payment difficulties independent of the COVID-19 pandemic, etc.). A model application form was made available on the website of the tax administration.\(^{501}\)

Bolivia laid down requirements and procedures for taxpayers to continue benefiting from their tax payment arrangements even after having defaulted on their payment obligations between 1 October 2019 and 30 June 2021.\(^{502}\) Also in Bolivia, the tax authorities regulated the

In view of the downward pressure on the economy in 2021 and the intensification of the pandemic, China (People’s Rep.) introduced a series of tax relief and tax deferral policies during the reporting period. In this regard, taxpayers are entitled to apply for tax deferral under certain conditions. According to the law, if taxpayers have special difficulties, they can apply for tax deferral before the expiry of the tax period established by law or the decision of the tax authority.\footnote{See CN: MoF and State Tax Authority’s announcement: Continuing Preferential Policies on Taxes and Fees in Response to the Pandemic (17 Mar. 2021), http://www.chinatax.gov.cn/chinatax/n359/c5162489/content.html (accessed 3 Mar. 2022); CN: Notice of the State Administration of Taxation on granting the function of taxation and aid to win the battle of epidemic prevention and control Notice on certain measures (General Administration of Taxation [2020] No. 14) http://www.chinatax.gov.cn/chinatax/n810341/n810825/c101434/c5143585/content.html (accessed 3 Mar. 2022); CN: State Administration of Taxation on carrying out the Opinions on the “Spring Breeze Action for convenient tax administration” (General Administration of Taxation Fa [2020] No. 11) http://www.chinatax.gov.cn/chinatax/n810341/n810825/c101434/c5145201/content.html (accessed 3 Mar. 2022). Chinese Taipei loosened the requirements for taxpayers to apply for the deferral of the tax payment or for payment by instalments. After acceptance by the tax authorities, it may approve the extension of payment at its discretion by 1 to 12 months or the payment by 2 to 36 instalments (each period is calculated as 1 month).\footnote{See TW: MoF Press Release: Taxpayers affected by the severe special infectious pneumonia (COVID-19) epidemic can apply for the deferred tax payments or for payments by instalments. Colombia also relaxed the requirements for granting delayed payment of arrears. In this regard, Decree 374 of 2021 was issued to modify the deadlines for the payment of income tax declared by legal entities classified as micro- and small companies. This, in order to contribute to the recovery of these companies whose economic activity was affected by the situation derived from the COVID-19 pandemic. Then, by means of Decree 612 of 2021, the terms for the payment of income tax were extended again due to the persistence of the economic situation affecting these companies, as well as to events that affected public order and prevented the normal development of the activities of these companies.\footnote{See CO: Decreto Presidencial No. 612 (20 Jun. 2021), https://dapre.presidencia.gov.co/normativa/normativa/DECRETO%20612%20DEL%20DE%20JUNIO%
Cyprus extended the instalment scheme and partial relief from late payment interest payments and related penalties for overdue tax liabilities. Under the amending law, eligible taxpayers may also apply for the instalment scheme for overdue tax liabilities relating to tax years 2016/2019 (inclusive), subject to a decrease in their annual turnover of at least 25% in 2020 (as compared to 2019) due to business disruption caused by the COVID-19 pandemic, in addition to the obligation to be registered (or exempt) from VAT.\(^507\)

By Act 533 of 27 March 2021, Denmark made it possible to avoid taxation of public COVID-19 support paid out as part of a support package if the support is paid back within 3 years.\(^508\)

Greece decided to defer the deadlines for the payment of instalments pertaining to liabilities under a settlement scheme expiring in May 2021, free of interest or surcharges.\(^509\)

In Lithuania, the government agreed business support measures regarding the negative effects of the COVID-19 pandemic, including a one-off possibility for businesses that suffered a loss in the 2020 tax period to utilize this loss by reducing their taxable profit in the 2019 tax period, a reduction of the VAT rate from 21% to 9% for the catering, culture and sports sectors until December 2022, and an extension of the tax debts collection relief for businesses affected by the pandemic until 31 August 2021.\(^510\)

Paraguay broadened the responsibilities of the Treasury Solicitor’s Office (Abogacía del Tesoro, ABT) as regards the approval of payment schemes applicable to tax debts, including those that are documented in debt certificates.\(^511\)

Peru introduced an extraordinary procedure for taxpayers to apply for a tax payment deferral on their outstanding balance for cases in which the taxpayer had lost such benefit due to non-compliance with the terms established under the tax payment deferral arrangement established under Legislative Decree 1,487 of 2020, until 31 December 2021.\(^512\)

In Portugal, Decree-Law 125/2021 of 30 December created (i) a regime allowing for the payment of taxes in instalments prior to the commencement/outside the context of tax enforcement proceedings, upon request of the taxpayer; and (ii) a regime of automatic payment in instalments for small tax debts (up to EUR 5,000.00 for individuals and EUR 10,000.00 for companies) not paid within the legal deadlines.513

Puerto Rico allowed qualified taxpayers to carry back eligible net operating losses for use on their 2018 or 2019 income tax returns through filing a request, instead of amending their tax returns for said years.514

The Netherlands granted various payment extensions to taxpayers upon request. The Dutch tax authority will propose a payment schedule for all extended payments, ending on 1 October 2027 at the latest. All new tax debts after 31 January 2022 must be paid normally, unless the government decides to extent the arrangement further. Tax collection interest has also been reduced to 0.1% until 1 July 2022. Starting 1 July 2022, this interest rate will be increased gradually from 1% to the normal 4% on 1 January 2024.515

The tax authorities of the United Kingdom have been reported to show a lot of leeway in agreeing postponement of liability and in approving time-to-pay arrangements during the pandemic. According to the National Audit Office Report on HMRC’s annual report and accounts for 2020/21, levels of tax debt increased greatly during the pandemic to a peak of GBP 67 billion in August 2020, largely because of HMRC’s decision to suspend collection of VAT and income tax self-assessment debts at the outset. This debt balance was down to GBP 57.5 billion by the end of March 2021, including GBP 3 billion of tax credit debt. By March 2021, there were 864,000 arrangements in place, facilitated by a VAT new payment scheme and an enhanced self-assessment self-serve time-to-pay facility. The average duration of repayment plans increased from around 5 months pre-pandemic to 12 months in July 2021. A helpline was made available for businesses and self-employed individuals who needed help with payment of tax during the COVID-19 pandemic.516

In the United States, the IRS exercised its discretion to refrain from offsetting stimulus payments made in the form of 2020 recovery rebate credits. Furthermore, statutory, and administrative protections exist for taxpayers who would experience economic hardship due to tax collection actions.517

To prevent taxpayer bankruptcy during the hardship of the pandemic, several countries have introduced specific measures in line with the best practice. Ideally, these interim measures could provide inspiration for how to further prevent taxpayer bankruptcy and insolvency.

Argentina suspended the initiation of collection lawsuits and the application of enforced collection measures, except for the collection activities currently conducted by the tax authorities (Administración Federal de Ingresos Públicos, AFIP) regarding the Once-Only Tax on Wealth, which was due on 16 April 2021.\(^{518}\)

Belgium temporarily reduced, from 15% to 10% and from 1 April to 30 September 2021, the general proportional fine that is imposed for non-payment or delayed payment of VAT (of which the due date is evidenced by a periodic VAT declaration). In addition, new legislation temporarily reduced the applicable annual interest rate for late payment of VAT from 9.6% to 4%, for April, May and June 2021, due to the COVID-19 pandemic.\(^{519}\)

In Colombia, Decree 939 of 2021 regulated the rescue and recovery mechanism for companies in insolvency proceedings, namely the reduction of penalties, interest and capital, in line with the best practice.\(^{520}\)

The Czech Republic further prolonged until 31 December 2021 the VAT waiver on respirator supplies due to the extraordinary circumstances caused by the COVID-19 pandemic. Also with regard to the pandemic, the Czech Republic extended the VAT exemption on the import of certain supplies used to combat COVID-19 from 30 April 2021 until 31 December 2021.\(^{521}\)

Denmark obtained approval from the EU Commission for its tax deferral scheme for small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) affected by the COVID-19 pandemic, and an increase amounting to EUR 7.6 million (DKK 57 million) in the budget of the scheme. Further, the European Commission also approved the application of a new deferral scheme for medium-sized enterprises in the amount of EUR 15.4 million (DKK 115 million). In addition, Law 779 authorized the extension of interest-free loans for wage tax and value added tax (VAT) payments to undertakings covering their withholding tax and labour market contribution duties on salaries for certain periods during the pandemic, subject to various conditions, as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic.\(^{522}\)

Also, in Denmark, Act 1956 of 19 October 2021 postponed the payback dates for loans granted by the state and covering VAT. By the same Act other means were also used to facilitate the liquidity situation for undertakings. In addition, according to a new provision in the Tax Assessment Act, a taxpayer to whom a temporary payment of COVID-19 support has been paid can choose the year of taxation of that support. The choice is between the year of payment and a later year; however, the support must be taxed no later than the year when the recipient obtained an administrative decision awarding them the final right to the amount.\(^{523}\)

Finland announced that the interest rate for late payment of undue taxes that are part of a repayment arrangement agreed with the tax authorities will be reduced to 2.5% (from 7%). The new rate applies with effect from 1 May 2021 on payment arrangements already in place and new arrangements for which the application has been submitted on or after 21 April 2021. The new rate would apply until 31 August 2021.\(^{524}\)

Greece announced that companies and individuals exercising business activities can depreciate their fixed assets for the period in which their operation was suspended under a state decision, namely the extraordinary circumstances of the COVID-19 pandemic, while the fixed assets would have been used during the suspension period. The same applies to individuals and companies that due to the COVID-19 pandemic will not operate again. In the same vein, business expenses incurred during the period of suspension are deductible regardless of whether the relevant services were provided. The expenses, however, need to be properly documented.

India further postponed the deadline for the dispute settlement payment under the Vivad se Vishwas Scheme and passing of orders and notices for assessments or reassessments from 30 April 2021 to 30 June 2021.

In Lithuania, companies affected by the pandemic and listed by the tax authorities may form interest-free loan agreements (MPS) until 31 August 2021 for the debts that have been comprised for the period from 16 March 2020 until 31 August 2021. Companies shall pay the loan in instalments until 31 December 2022, among other measures.

In Moldova, the Exceptional Situations Commission issued a decision providing that expenses incurred by legal entities until 31 May 2021 for purchasing COVID-19 vaccines and vaccinating their employees against COVID-19 will not constitute a taxable benefit granted by the employer to its employees on which individual income tax, social security and medical assistance contributions must be calculated and paid.

New Zealand extended the deadline by which a person entitled to research and development tax credits must apply for criteria and methodology approvals for the 2020/21 income year by 3 months. The extension applies where the planning or conduct of eligible research and development or the ability to obtain necessary information, seek advice and formulate an application on time has been materially delayed or disrupted by the COVID-19 pandemic and its effects.

Panama introduced an amnesty regime that covers debts owed to the Social Security Authority (Caja de Seguro Social, CSS). The law grants to individuals and legal entities a 100% waiver on late payment interest and fines if at least 50% of the outstanding balance owed to the CSS is paid within 24 months from the law's entry into force.

In Peru, Decree 144-2021-EF allowed the tax authorities to provide further deferral of arrears to taxpayers who, due to the pandemic, were not able to fulfill the tax liabilities that were the object of delayed payments in 2020, provided they produce evidence of a decrease in their income in 2021, compared to 2020.531 Peru also provided procedural measures for taxpayers in the tourism sector to request the application of the tax deferral and payment plan regime, initially introduced through Law 31103 of 2021 due to the adverse economic effects of the COVID-19 pandemic on the tourism sector.532 So did Paraguay, expanding the scope of said measures to catering, accommodation, tourist transport, tourist guide and event organization services, while enacting a special VAT regime for leasing of immovable property for business purposes.533

Also, Uruguay extended the expiration date of the VAT reduction granted to certain activities in the tourism sector as a response to the continued harmful economic effects of the COVID-19 pandemic.\textsuperscript{534}

In the United States, a few federal states have taken further measures (exemptions, allowing deductions) to help taxpayers coping with the pandemic. The IRS exercised its discretion to refrain from offsetting stimulus payments made in the form of 2020 recovery rebate credits. The IRS amended its offer in compromise (OIC) policies to allow OIC applicants to seek an offset bypass refund due to financial hardship. For OICs accepted after 1 November 2021, the IRS will not offset the taxpayer's refund for the year of acceptance. Also, the IRS will permit taxpayers with a pending OIC to request an offset bypass refund due to hardship. Both changes make the OIC program more accessible to taxpayers. However, it has been reported that the IRS could improve its systemic protections and be more proactive in identifying taxpayers at risk of economic hardship.\textsuperscript{535}

Natural disasters are extraordinary situations calling for superior citizens' protection, including flexibility in tax payments. The COVID-19 pandemic has been a truly unique situation because all countries have suffered from it, and whether or not this is defined as a “natural disaster” in the respective jurisdictions, it is clear that the situation has prompted the states to promptly relieve their citizens of their tax and reporting obligations.

A myriad of countries continued their policy of extending deadlines for filing tax returns and providing information, as it happened in 2020. That occurred in the cases of Algeria.\textsuperscript{536}

There were other cases, such as that of Moldova, in which the extension of the deadlines for filing tax returns and the postponement of payments of taxes by legal entities whose administrators (or legal representatives) responsible for filing tax returns and payment of taxes were on medical leave due to the COVID-19 pandemic were revoked, as the Decree declaring the state of emergency due to the pandemic, which served as legal grounds for these deadline extensions, was annulled by the Constitutional Court.

In addition, Italy suspended the activities of collection agents, in response to the pandemic. While the COVID-19 pandemic was at its peak, HMRC in the United Kingdom reduced the numbers of enquiries and other investigations commenced. Part of the reason for that was the requirement for HMRC officers who could do so to work from home, and also the deployment of considerable resources to designing and administering the many grants and loan schemes available to business to tide them over that period. It has been reported that the current signs are that investigative activity is again on the increase, with larger numbers of "nudge letters" being sent out, albeit to relatively narrow groups of taxpayers.

Other natural disasters occurred throughout 2021, compelling the tax authorities to enforce further measures. Turkey introduced force majeure provisions for certain cities due to wildfires and flood disasters. Taxpayers were covered by force majeure provisions up to 31 December 2021. According to those measures, certain periods regarding taxation were extended such as submission periods for tax returns and declarations, the payment periods for all taxes, the requirement for HMRC officers who could do so to work from home, and also the deployment of considerable resources to designing and administering the many grants and loan schemes available to business to tide them over that period. It has been reported that the current signs are that investigative activity is again on the increase, with larger numbers of "nudge letters" being sent out, albeit to relatively narrow groups of taxpayers.

payment periods for tax penalties and interest for late payment, etc. Collection dates of taxes and other duties were also extended until 30 November 2021. The force majeure extensions started to apply due to the COVID-19 pandemic in 2020 and continued to apply until 1 June 2021, which was the date on which the removal of measures was gradually started by the Ministry of Internal Affairs.567

9. Cross-Border Situations

Unfortunately, taxpayers’ rights in cross-border situations seem to be weakened in practice, as they are generally not involved in the cross-border procedures carried out between the states. This situation entails the risk of taxpayers not exercising and protecting their rights in the procedures effectively. However, positive developments have occurred as well with the systems to ensure taxpayers’ legal standing in terms of access to mutual agreement procedures (MAPs) in article 16(1) of the Multilateral Convention to Implement Tax Treaty Related Measures to Prevent Base Erosion and Profit Shifting (MLI)568 and mandatory arbitration in article 19(1).

In the same vein, rules on the mandatory disclosure of tax minimization arrangements were introduced broadly to grant the tax authorities early access to “timely, comprehensive and relevant information on aggressive tax planning strategies” so that they may “quickly respond to tax risks through informed risk assessments, audits, or changes to legislation or regulations”.569 Essentially, this measure served an objective similar to other forms of information gathering and exchange of this information, namely to enable the tax administrations to use the information for statistical purposes as an early warning system to highlight the issues they want to address. However, the analysis and legal prequalification applied to the collected facts by the tax administration included an inherent risk that indicia of a potential tax offence could be derived, providing the information with a probative value.570 If the disclosed information may give rise to liability for the taxpayer or the advisers under punitive law, this also raises the question about the right not to self-incriminate (nemo tenetur se detegere),571 as described in section 5.2, of this yearbook.

The surveyed jurisdictions did not report many developments in 2021 regarding the exchange of information’s benchmarks monitored by the OPTR, as the findings mostly related to the overall trends, as will be analysed in this section. Probably the most important development regarding the matter was the introduction of new reporting obligations in the European Union for digital platforms and amendments to the existing framework of administrative cooperation in the field of taxation, rules adopted by the sixth amendment to the Directive on Administrative Cooperation (2011/16), approved by the Council of the European Union on 22 March 2021.

The DAC7 expands the automatic exchange of information and reporting obligations to cover certain transactions through digital platforms, which will have to collect and verify the seller’s name, address, taxpayer identification number and VAT number, as well as business registration number and permanent establishments in the European Union, if applicable. Additionally, it modifies existing regulations with the aim of improving administrative cooperation in the exchange of information, as regards, for instance, joint audits, information requests and data breaches.

A similar development happened at a local level in the United States. Washington state’s Department of Revenue adopted regulations clarifying sales and use tax collection and reporting responsibilities of marketplace facilitators on behalf of online sellers as required by state law. The regulations echoed the state’s mandate that marketplace facilitators collect and remit sales or use tax and other applicable taxes and fees on behalf of online sellers on all Washington-sourced taxable retail sales made through the facilitator’s platform. In addition, the regulations address a variety of key topics, in terms strikingly similar to those of DAC7.

9.1. Exchange of information

9.1.1. Exchange of information on request (EoIR): The right of the taxpayer to be informed and to challenge EoI

Minimum standard: The requesting state should notify the taxpayer of cross-border requests for information, unless it has specific grounds for considering that this would prejudice the process of investigation. The requested state should inform the taxpayer, unless it has a reasoned request from the requesting state that the taxpayer should not be informed on the grounds that it would prejudice the investigation.

As a key element of a democratic state, the rule of law prescribes that taxpayer must be informed when a cross-border request for information is to be made.

previously informed of any governmental attempt to exercise its public powers. In an ideal world, the fact that a taxable event comprises a cross-border element should strengthen the protection of the taxpayers’ rights corresponding to the situation. Best practice should include specific provisions regulating the time, form and conditions for the notification and allow the exchange of information also to be used for evidence to benefit the taxpayer.

Unfortunately, the world seems to be less than ideal, as 88% of the surveyed jurisdictions report that the taxpayers do not have the right to be informed before exchanging information, as illustrated by Chart 61. This is especially an unfortunate development compared to 2020, where the number was 77%.
Not informing the taxpayer before the exchange is apparent for situations involving information from third parties. Chart 62 demonstrates that 88% of the surveyed jurisdictions do not provide for this protection. This is also a decline compared to 2020, where the number was 82%.

Only Honduras reports developments, by noting changes in its administrative practice due to a perceived change in the interpretation of rights assisting taxpayers in this context.\(^\text{575}\)

9.1.2. A disturbing development: The removal of the right of the taxpayer to be notified in certain states under international pressure

The OECD Forum on Transparency and Exchange of Information applied pressure on countries to repeal the taxpayer’s right to be informed prior to the exchange of information already in 2015, which has provided for an unfortunate development ever since with numerous countries removing this right. As evidenced by Chart 63, an extra 6% of surveyed jurisdictions reported their previous acknowledgement of the right to be informed being removed due to the pressure from the OECD Forum, which is a slight decrease compared to 9% in 2020.

No new developments were reported in 2021.

As presented in section 4.1., the exchange of information may lead to a tax assessment. If that is the case, all fundamental principles of proportionality, non bis in idem (prohibition of double jeopardy), audi alteram partem (the right to be heard before any decision is taken) and nemo tenetur se ipsum accusare (the principle against self-incrimination) apply.

Although essential, this does not provide the taxpayer with adequate protection if these principles are not implemented in practice since the taxpayer is not informed, as described in section 9.1.1. of this yearbook.

The right to be heard before the exchange of information takes place is not granted in 92% of the surveyed jurisdictions, as illustrated by Chart 64.

An interesting development is provided by the Federal Court of Canada's decision in Blue Bridge Trust Company Inc v. Minister of National Revenue. The information was being sought from the Canadian trustee of a few trusts where persons resident in France were apparently interested in them. While endorsing the need for judicial review of the request for information, the court pointed out that the requested authority had to assume that the request for information complied with the domestic law of the requesting state and was necessary for the purposes of the investigation, based on mutual trust between the parties of a double tax convention (Canada and France, in this case). The courts had merely to verify that the information order was based on a sufficiently reasoned request by the requesting authority concerning information not manifestly devoid of any foreseeable relevance having regard, on the one hand, to the taxpayer concerned and to any third party who was being asked to provide the information and, on the other hand, to the tax purpose being pursued.577

Against this background, the European Court of Auditors affirmed that EU Member States only make limited use of the information exchanged automatically, by either (i) weaknesses related to the timeliness, the accuracy and the completeness of AEOI; (ii) DAC2 information exchange functions generally on time, but still lacks in data quality and completeness; (iii) Member States receive huge volumes of information, with information generally underused; (iv) DAC1 and

As a result, less than a third of the items of information received under DAC1 and DAC2, for example, resulted in further tax-related actions.\(^{578}\)

In Denmark, the National Tax Tribunal decided an appeal on access to information received in an exchange of information on the taxpayer between Denmark and Luxembourg and more specifically access to cover letters, e-mails, and other documents initiating the procedure between the Danish competent authority and the Luxembourg competent authority. In a noteworthy development, the Danish competent authority declined the request for information made by the taxpayer, stating that the e-mails and schematic forms in question were exempt from access to information under section 15 of the Danish Public Administration Act. On appeal, the Danish National Tax Tribunal upheld the decision of the Danish competent authority, based on the protection of confidentiality. The Tribunal also drew attention to the fact that the Tribunal itself had reviewed the documents and information in question and confirmed the nature of the documents and information. The Tribunal noted that the Danish competent authority had asked the Luxembourg competent authority whether the information in question should be regarded as confidential, and the Luxembourg competent authority had confirmed.\(^{579}\)

All developments reported in 2021 come from Latin America.

The OECD and the Global Forum on Transparency and Exchange of Information for Tax Purposes issued its Tax Transparency in Latin America 2021 Progress Report, according to which six out of eight Latin American jurisdictions reviewed against the enhanced standard on exchange of information on request until 2020 and were rated as Largely Compliant. Also, nine Latin American jurisdictions already participated in the automatic exchange of financial account information.582

Precisely due to its recent commitment to the Punta del Este Declaration, Honduras reports actions towards the improvement of its data protection standards. According to the OECD, the EoI infrastructure is progressing with the setting up of an EoI unit and manual, but delegation of the CA function and the use of EoI tools are yet to be implemented. The implementation of the AEOI standard by a specific date has yet not been considered.583

A positive development has also been reported in Colombia. Law 2155 of 2021 unified the definition of “beneficial owner”, both for reporting information for domestic and cross-border purposes, under the concept of “final beneficiary”. In this regard, the identification and registration of final beneficiaries before the tax authority was established, its administration, conditions, mechanisms were regulated to guarantee that it contains correct and updated information, as well as its confidentiality.584

There have been some positive developments in this area, as China (People’s Rep.) reported a shift towards the minimum standard in terms of exchange of information obtained from third parties. The tax authorities require financial institutions to provide a specified and reasonable period for account holders to report changes to their information. Where a personal data processor provides personal information to any party outside China (People’s Rep.), it must inform the taxpayer of such provision, the purpose and form of the processing, the type of

There is room for development regarding the taxpayer’s right to initiate and participate in mutual agreement procedures, as only 44% of the surveyed jurisdictions have acknowledged the taxpayers’ right to request the initiation of a mutual agreement procedure, as illustrated by Chart 67. This is a slight improvement compared to 40% in 2020.

Also, only 10% of the reports provided for the taxpayers’ right to access the communication exchanged in the procedure's context, as evidenced by Chart 68. The latter is a slight setback compared to the 12% in 2020, and a significant setback compared to 2019, where 23% of the surveyed jurisdictions provided such a right.

While there is still room for improvement in this area, some positive developments have been recorded in 2021.

Mediation as an additional option for tax disputes (in general, most administrative disputes) was introduced in Lithuania. However, so far the tax authority has not tended to accept mediation and prefers that taxpayers should initiate the standard procedure of mutual agreement.587

Spain approved new regulations developing the mutual agreement procedures included in the tax treaties signed by Spain as well as in the Arbitration Convention588 without substantial amendments from the MAP draft regulations. The regulations have a three-fold aim: to complete the implementation of the EU Tax Dispute Resolution Directive;589 to introduce 588 EU: Convention on the elimination of double taxation in connection with the adjustment of profits of associated enterprises 90/436/EEC.

determined measures included in Base Erosion and Profit Shifting (BEPS) Action 14 minimum standard; and to resolve problems in order to enhance legal certainty.\textsuperscript{590}

Morocco also published its guidance on the mutual agreement procedure. Access to MAPs is guaranteed for all taxpayers meeting the requirements provided in the tax treaties article on the matter. The taxpayer should submit the MAP in their residence state. However, some treaties provide for a different provision; it is therefore necessary to refer to these treaties in order to ascertain the place of submission of the MAP.\textsuperscript{591}

In addition, the United Arab Emirates issued mutual agreement procedure (MAP) guidance for tax treaties, aiming at facilitating taxpayers’ access to effective and expedient dispute resolution mechanisms under bilateral tax treaties and including information on how a MAP request should be initiated, to whom it should be presented and what information should be included in the request.\textsuperscript{592}

In Turkey, the waiver from the requirement of legal action for the initiation of a mutual agreement procedure has been repealed. This means that the application for the initiation of the mutual agreement procedure will only interrupt the term of litigation, i.e. in case the contracting states do not agree, the taxpayer may resume the litigation procedure within the remaining time.\textsuperscript{593}

On the other hand, Mexico introduced a provision in its Tax Code that maintains the tax administration's collection powers in force despite the taxpayer's request to initiate a MAP procedure. Consequently, the taxpayer must pay the full tax assessment when requesting a MAP. This effectively cancels the right to access a MAP in Mexico, as the taxpayer would have to pay first, in a manner identical to the solve et repele discussed in section 6.5, of this yearbook. Additionally, MAP processing times in Mexico are generally not concluded within 24 months, so paying first and then contesting essentially renders the MAP ineffective.\textsuperscript{594}

10. Legislation

10.1. The general framework

In a democratic state, taxes must be based on a legal source, which results from the will of the people expressed through its political representation in the legislature. It is not sufficient for tax law to formally comply with the issuing state’s legal order to safeguard taxpayers’ rights in practice comprehensively, rather, taxes must be the outcome of the citizens’ consent.

Ideally, taxpayers should be involved in shaping the legislation via public consultation that is both adequate in communication, accessibility, and duration for the deadline to reply. Besides, tax legislation should solely regulate taxable events \textit{ex nunc} (from the moment of its enactment).

In practice, a fair amount of tax legislation will be enacted to prevent certain taxpayer behaviours, for example to close loopholes in the legislation. To do so without providing taxpayers opportunities to rearrange their affairs, legislators sometimes deem it necessary to enact the amendments retroactively. This behaviour should be a last resort and done only exceptionally under circumstances explicitly stated, narrowly drafted and interpreted. This is not always the case in practice for different reason, which will be analysed further below.

Perhaps as a consequence of the "hardening" of soft law and the progressive intervention of multilateral bodies in the legislative processes in tax matters, and probably in response to doubts about the democratic legitimacy of the rule-making processes carried out by such bodies, 2021 was the scene of a growing trend towards public consultation. This is particularly notable with respect to the European Union, where the European Commission confirmed a steady (and growing) movement towards greater citizen participation in EU regulatory processes in general. In this regard, the Commission follows in the footsteps of the OECD, which maintained in 2021 its policy of public consultation on a number of its proposals, in particular those related to the digitization of the economy. This process is described in more detail in section 10.3.

Facts

The case concerned tax-assessment proceedings in which the applicant company had been ordered to pay approximately EUR 298,813 together with a 10% surcharge.

In 1995 the tax authorities corrected the company’s tax return and applied a 10% penalty on the amount due. The company first appealed to the head of regional tax office (1996-2000) and then in 2000 to the court. In October 2000 the tax authorities issued it with a summons to pay, expressly stating that the purpose of the summons was to interrupt the period before the tax debt became time-barred.

In a judgment of 10 October 2002 – while the company’s case was pending at first instance – the Court of Cassation adopted new case-law to the effect that this type of summons did not interrupt the limitation period in such cases. As a result, the recovery of tax debt had been time-barred since 15 February 2001 (a date prior to the actual emergence of this case-law).

The applicant company first referred to this case-law in April 2004 before the Court of Appeal. However, in July 2004 the legislature intervened to reverse this development and to restore the previous administrative practice by means of a law that was immediately applicable to pending proceedings. This legislation was applied to the applicant’s case by the Court of Cassation, which consequently dismissed its appeal on points of law in 2009.

Decision

Articles 6 § 1: The applicant company complained about the legislator’s intervention during the proceedings. It argued that if the new law had not been applied retrospectively to its case, its tax debt would have become time-barred in accordance with the case-law of the Court of Cassation as established in a judgment of 10 October 2002.

Applicability of Article 6: Tax assessment proceedings did not fall within the scope of article 6 but the imposition of the surcharge was to be considered as “criminal charge”. Article 6 therefore applied. At the same time, the tax surcharge had a close link with the tax debt; it thus differed from the hard core of criminal law. The criminal-head guarantees do not necessarily apply with their full stringency in such cases (Jussila v. Finland (GC), no. 73053/01, § 43, ECHR 2006-XIV).

On the merits:

1. As a result of the impugned law the applicant’s debt had ultimately not been considered time-barred. The intervention of the legislature had decisively influenced the judicial outcome of the dispute to which the state was a party.

2. The retrospective law had sought to neutralize the effect of the case-law introduced by the Court of Cassation, which itself had been retrospective (it had undermined legal certainty). The retrospective application of that law cannot be justified by the need of safeguarding the financial interests of the state. The Court accepted – in the circumstances of the case – that there might have been other taxpayers which had indeed benefited from that change because their proceedings were concluded in due course, before summer 2004. That creates “arbitrary discrimination between different taxpayers” that the impugned law meant to avoid, in the court’s view.

As to the length of the proceedings, the applicant company first had to file an appeal with the head of the regional tax office which was pending for 4 years. Once this appeal had been dismissed, the company had recourse to judicial review proceedings, which lasted 9 years. No reasons can justify such an extremely long duration of the examination of the tax case.

Positive developments have been reported in this area in Belgium regarding the interpretation of the general anti-avoidance rule. So far, the provision has been interpreted by the Belgian Minister of Finance as well as the Belgian tax administration in a way that makes the rule applicable to a series of legal acts of which the constituent acts did not all take place in the taxable period associated with the assessment year. It was enough that the last legal act occurred after the entry into force of the provision (2013). However, in 2021, the Court of Cassation confirmed the criterion set forth by a series of judgments of the Ghent Court of Appeal, according to which it is required that all legal acts which, taken as a whole, bring about the same transaction, fall within the temporal scope of the provision and are thus established as from the assessment year 2013.596

In Bulgaria, there have been significant amendments to the Law on Administrative Violations and Penalties, which also influences tax matters. In this regard, the National Revenue Agency issued a guidance on their application in pending tax situations, distinguishing when the old regulation is applicable and when the new one applies.597

The Luxembourg Constitutional Court declared unconstitutional the economic retroactivity of the combined provisions of articles 1er, point 5°, and 4 of the Law of 23 July 2016598 transposing Council Directive (EU) 2015/2060 of 10 November 2015599 on taxation of savings income in the form of interest payments, which entered into force on 1 January 2016, in so far as they entail retroactive application from January 2016 of the exclusion of interest payments from foreign paying agents from the scope of a reduced 10% withholding tax on certain interests produced by movable savings, are in line with the principles of legal certainty, respect for legitimate expectations and non-retroactivity of laws, as well as in article 10bis and article 112 of the Luxembourg Constitution.600

In the case, the taxpayer held Swiss bonds and regularly received interest from a paying agent established in Switzerland. Until 31 December 2015, those interests fell within the scope of the Law of 23 December 2005.601 The taxpayers’ request for the application of the reduced withholding tax was denied, in view of the entry into force of the Law of 23 July 2016 previously mentioned. That interest was therefore retroactively included in the taxable income subject to the application of the normal progressive scale of income tax, so as to be subject to a higher a priori tax.

The Constitutional Court used this case as its first opportunity to rule on the constitutional value of the principles of legal certainty, protection of legitimate expectations and non-retroactivity of laws not included in the text of the Constitution. Based on the case law of the ECJ and the ECtHR, the court regarded the principle of certainty and its expressions, such as the principles of legitimate expectations and non-retroactivity of laws, as among the principles inherent in any legal system based on respect for the law and therefore as part of the fundamental elements of the rule of law.

Against this background, the court rejected the (economic) retroactive application of the 2016 rules, since the principle of legal certainty precludes norms from being applied retroactively. The Court upheld the position of the Administrative Court of Luxembourg, which rightly pointed out in that regard that the foreseeable nature of the law means that the rule of law must define the regime of a certain act in such a way that the public authorities or citizens can reasonably foresee its consequences at the time when they carry it out, which implies that the rule of law has been established prior to the implementation of the act. Retroactive application is only possible exceptionally, when justified by the general interest and where the legitimate expectations of the persons concerned are duly respected, which was not the case in the situation at hand.602

In India, the Supreme Court found "ludicrous" the tax authorities’ attempt to apply an expanded 2012 definition of software royalty to events occurring since 1 June 1976. The Court held that the amendment could not be considered merely “clarificatory”, since the term "computer software" was introduced into the country’s legislation long after 1976. The Court also found that the unilateral amendment by India did not amend the definition of ‘royalty’ in the relevant Double Tax Convention and consequently the definition in the Convention, being more beneficial would apply.603

Also, in India, the Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi expressly qualified retrospective tax legislation as “a mistake”.604 In this regard, the government proposed to withdraw the retrospective application of the taxability of gains arising from the transfer of assets located in the country through the transfer of the shares of a foreign company. The retrospective application of the indirect transfer of Indian assets provision in section 9 of the Income Tax Act, 1961 was originally introduced in the Finance Act 2012. Following suit, the Parliament passed a bill that eliminated the country’s retrospective taxation in respect of transfer of a capital asset situate in India in consequence of the transfer of a share or interest in a company or entity registered or incorporated outside India made before the 28th day of May, 2012.

Further, any existing tax demand stood nullified on the condition that any pending litigation, arbitration or any other proceedings either by the taxpayer or anyone claiming through the taxpayer, is withdrawn. Further, any amount paid as tax would be refunded, without interest.

On the other hand, negative developments have been reported in New Zealand, where more statements have been made of proposed legislative changes well ahead of any draft legislation being made public and eventually enacted. In addition, in Chinese Taipei, new legislation regarding capital gains in force from 1 July 2021 taxes the transfer of real property acquired on or after 1 January 2016.

Overall, 2021 was the scene of significant growth in public consultation for tax matters. A noteworthy number of countries brought the discussion of a wide range of regulatory reforms.
to the public arena. This was the case of Australia, Canada, Chile, Ireland, Italy.

Singapore, South Africa, Spain, and the United States.

The EU Commission conducted a major public consultation initiative on taxpayers’ rights, designed to collect information on direct tax-related problems that citizens currently face when they exercise their freedoms for cross-border activities, as well as collecting information on certain indirect tax (VAT) issues especially affecting SMEs. IBFD submitted a contribution, in which it highlighted the current lack of harmonization and coordination is an issue of grave concern, requiring action from the EC by some form of "codification", whether by soft law minimum standards and best practices alone or by a combination of non-binding guidance and hard law instruments. In the opinion of IBFD, a set of minimum standard and best practices, coupled with additional soft law guidelines, would provide a defined picture of EU-wide taxpayers' fundamental rights. That would give taxpayers a clear awareness of the scope of their entitlements under EU law and would signal to domestic bodies and courts the extent and the boundaries of their prerogatives in matters in which taxation could impinge upon fundamental rights.618

Besides that, the EU Commission launched 17 other public consultation initiatives in 2021, covering topics such as the VAT rules for financial and insurance services,619 the use of shell entities and arrangements for tax purposes,620 the debt-equity bias reduction allowance (DEBRA),621 a system for avoiding double taxation regarding withholding taxes,622 an update on the excise duties for manufactured tobacco products,623 a review of tax rules for alcohol and tobacco bought abroad,624 the strengthening rules on administrative cooperation and expanding the exchange of information,625 a so-called “digital levy”,626 the so-called “EU Green economy Deal” (carbon border adjustment mechanism), a review of the Energy Taxation Directive, a review of a tax relief and the renewal of an autonomous tariff suspension for the Canary islands (Spain) on certain local products, a review of tax relief on local products of France, a proposal for a Council Directive to lift the cost of VAT on EU measures that are in the public interest, detailed implementing rules for the VAT e-commerce trade, a modern EU business taxation framework, an initiative for sharing best practices and supporting implementation regarding the so-called “VAT Gap”, and regarding the so-called single corporate tax rulebook for the European Union (BEFIT).

Despite this intense consultation activity, a few jurisdictions have reported a shift away from the best practice.

In Slovenia, neither public consultations nor referenda were allowed in 2021, contrary to normal circumstances and constitutional safeguards, based on the need to speed up COVID-19-related measures. Also, despite what appears to be an intense consultation activity,

New Zealand reported minimal use of public consultation, and even setting aside the usual tax policy process.\(^{639}\)

In Poland, the quality of the tax legislative process and its products is reported to have deteriorated, partly because the practical role of public consultations has been decreasing. It has been reported that deadlines for public consultations were many times too short (a few days for extensive drafts with major legal, social and economic consequences), opinions expressed by the public, social partners, interest groups and independent experts were not given adequate recognition, and the pace of parliamentary discussions was sometimes too fast to allow for an in-depth consideration and necessary correction of the drafts. This is considered to have resulted in the adoption of tax legislation of poor quality, inducing a lot of uncertainty and confusion, and requiring urgent changes and extensive administrative guidance.\(^{640}\)

On the brighter side, a positive development has been reported in Colombia, where a tax reform project presented during the first quarter of 2021 (Draft Bill 594-2020C) was withdrawn... from Congress by the National Government due to strong social protests of disagreement. In the second half of 2021, consultations and public sessions were held from which Law 2155 of 2021 was built.641

Finally, the United Kingdom reported a marked increase in prior consultation, as well as a perception of openness among HRMC teams to a constructive dialogue with taxpayers, as discussed in section 2 of this yearbook.642

11. Revenue Practice and Guidance

11.1. The general framework

To abide by the law and comply with their tax obligations, taxpayers must not merely comprehend the objects of the law but also be aware of it. This awareness of the legal materials is a cornerstone of legal certainty and, therefore, for protecting taxpayers’ rights. From a practical point of view, the taxpayer must be able to access the relevant legal materials and to be able to rely on any binding guidance provided by the tax authorities.643 While the tax authorities may be reluctant to publish guidance, thereby committing themselves to specific interpretations or applications of the legal materials, these measures provide additional certainty for taxpayers and are increasingly considered an example of good governance by ombudsman offices.644

11.2. The publication of all relevant materials

Minimum standard: Taxpayers should be entitled to access all relevant legal material, comprising legislation, administrative regulations, rulings, manuals and other guidance.

The general move towards compliance with this minimum standard, underpinned by the digitalization of tax administrations, continued in 2021.\footnote{See OPTR, supra n. 143 (2021), at sec. 11.2.}

In addition, in \textbf{Honduras}, taxpayers gained access to relevant legal material, comprising legislation and administrative regulation in 2021, through the "Digital Services" section of the tax administration's webpage.\footnote{See HN: SAR – Servicios Digitales, https://www.sar.gob.hn/#ServiciosDigitales (accessed 4 Mar. 2022). See also HN: OPTR Report (Tax Administration), Questionnaire 2, Question 80.}

  \item \textbf{Shifted away from the minimum standard:} Guatemala \end{itemize}

The only reported development regarding access to legal materials through ways other than the Internet is a setback: although most procedures are conducted online in \textbf{Guatemala}, there are almost no options for taxpayers that do not have access to the Internet.\footnote{See GT: OPTR Report (Taxpayers/Tax Practitioners), Questionnaire 2, Question 81.}

As it was in 2020, in 2021, guidelines on the tax measures have also been of immense importance, considering the vast number of unprecedented, specialized tax rules implemented due to the COVID-19 pandemic, although this intense activity in terms of taxpayer guidance has not always been linked to the special circumstances related to the pandemic.

A multitude of circulars, rulings and further guidance were issued by several jurisdictions in 2021.

Regarding the topics addressed, jurisdictions such as Barbados\(^{648}\) and Nigeria\(^{649}\) provided guidance with reference to deadlines for tax returns and similar administrative filing obligations and in a number of cases, guidance aims to clarify and to relax administrative obligations that would have been excessively burdensome given the circumstances of the COVID-19 pandemic.

pandemic, as is the case for Chile,650 Isle of Man,651 Italy,652 and some federal jurisdictions within the United States.653

Also, numerous jurisdictions have reported news on specific guidelines intended to help clarify the application of tax measures to non-residents, such as Australia,654 Chile,655 Italy,656 Poland657 and South Africa.658

The taxation of non-residents was also addressed by Thailand\footnote{659} and Ukraine\footnote{660}.

A growing body of guidelines regards corporate taxation issues, signalling tax authorities' aim to increase certainty and reduce risks of litigation, as happened in Chile\footnote{661}.

Guidance continues to be issued in relation to the application of transfer price rules in many jurisdictions such as Germany\footnote{662}, Peru\footnote{663}, Poland\footnote{664}, and regarding the application of withholding taxation.

Tackling tax evasion and international tax avoidance remained a key concern. For example, in the United States, the Internal Revenue Service updated the FAQs on the Foreign Account Tax Compliance Act (FATCA) general issues. Also, the US Internal Revenue Service issued updated frequently asked questions (FAQs) on qualified intermediaries (QIs), withholding foreign partnerships (WPs) and withholding foreign trusts (WTs).

Increased attention by tax authorities can be noted also in relation to VAT and indirect taxation more broadly, as is the case for Bolivia, Dominican Republic, Italy, Ireland and Poland.

Guidance was put forward by states, including France, Chile and the Philippines, in relation to the interpretation and application of conventions on double taxation.

The taxation of the digital economy represented an area of attention and several jurisdictions, including Malaysia, the United States, Spain and Thailand, provided guidance to help clarify relevant rules.

11.4. Non-binding guidance

Minimum standard: Where a taxpayer relies on published guidance of a revenue authority that subsequently proves to be inaccurate, changes should apply only prospectively.

The principle of good faith is a cornerstone in all legal relations, so taxpayers have the right to rely on the guidance provided by the tax authorities from this principle as a legitimate expectation. This is part of legal certainty, and as a minimum standard, taxpayers’ legitimate expectations require that inaccuracies in advance rulings provided by the tax administration should only apply prospectively.

The OECD published its report Building Tax Culture, Compliance and Citizenship, aiming to help tax revenue authorities in designing and implementing taxpayer education initiatives. It examines 140 initiatives under implementation in 59 developed and developing countries, offering a classification of different approaches to taxpayer education, and identifying common challenges and solutions.679

There was an interesting multilateral effort to provide guidance as the OECD released opinions, approved by the Conference of the Parties to the Multilateral Convention to Implement Tax Treaty Related Measures to Prevent Base Erosion and Profit Shifting (MLI),680 to address interpretation and implementation concerns regarding the MLI and to solve possible mismatches between the MLI and tax treaties. Other opinions were released in 2021, covering the entry into effect under article 35(1)(a) MLI, the implementation of article 16 of the MLI

In this regard, a noteworthy judgment issued by the Netherlands Hoge Raad (Supreme Court) went towards the minimum standard. The Court protected the taxpayer against an incorrect statement on the website of the Tax and Customs Administration regarding revision in the event of the surrender of an annuity. This allows for the taxpayer to rely on information published by the Dutch tax authorities, even when this appears to be inaccurate at a later moment. The taxpayer can apply the principle of protection of legitimate expectations now more easily, in relation to this information.\footnote{See NL: HR, 5 Nov. 2021, case No. 20/0373 [ECLI:NL:HR:2021:1654], \url{https://www.ndfr.nl/content/ECLI_NL_HR_2021_1654} (accessed 15 Mar. 2022).}

As reported in section 3.13 of this yearbook, the Supreme Court of Spain stated that tax rulings should be considered not only by tax officers but also by judges when applying a specific tax provision in the light of taxpayers’ legitimate expectations. In this regard, the judgment stated that the courts are obliged to recognize the taxpayer’s right to rely on the criteria that the tax authority (i) determines as directly applicable to his case, in the case of a consultation made by the taxpayer himself; or (ii) has repeatedly applied to similar cases.\footnote{See ES: STS 4108/2021 [ECLI:ES:TS:2021:4108], 2 Jun. 2021, \url{https://www.poderjudicial.es/search/TS/openDocument/46cd0847047cd940/20211122} (accessed 15 Mar. 2022). 12. Institutional Framework for Protecting Taxpayers’ Rights

12.1. The general framework

In practice, an institutional framework is needed when states enact their powers towards taxpayers. In doing so, states must adhere to legality, meaning that they must both enact their powers and at the same time meet their obligations. The framework necessary can be shaped in different ways in order to ensure adequate protection of taxpayers’ rights.

12.2. Statements of taxpayers’ rights: charters, service charters and taxpayers’ bills of rights
Minimum standard: Adoption of a charter or statement of taxpayers’ rights should be a minimum standard.

Shifted towards / improved the minimum standard:
- Australia, Chile

Shifted away from the minimum standard:
- Poland

Best practice: A separate statement of taxpayers’ rights under audit should be provided to taxpayers who are audited.

Shifted towards / matched the best practice:
- Chile, Cyprus, United Kingdom

Shifted away from the minimum standard:
- None

Enacting a set of rules identifying taxpayers’ rights can take various forms, such as a taxpayers’ bill of rights or taxpayers’ charters. These different types of rules provide an institutional framework of certainty regarding the content and scope of taxpayers’ rights and the tax authority’s obligations, which can also be defined through service charters. As illustrated by Chart 78, 54% of the surveyed jurisdictions have taxpayers’ charters or bills of rights.

However, 23% of the surveyed jurisdictions have reported that these provisions are not legally effective, as illustrated by Chart 79, which is actually a great improvement compared to 53% in 2020.

A great example of a general framework comes from Australia, where the Australian Taxation Office has established and maintained a Taxpayers’ Charter since 1993, following a Parliamentary Committee report. Recently, there have been recommendations for changes to the Charter to enhance enforceability, awareness and status. For example, the Australian House of Representatives Standing Committee on Tax and Revenue has recommended “that

As stated many times throughout this yearbook, \textbf{Chile} has reported a general improvement on the regulation of taxpayers' rights as defined in their Tax Code, due to the issuance of Letter 12/2021 by the tax authorities.\footnote{See secs. 1.4, 1.5, 1.6, 3.8, 4.1, 4.2, 4.3, 4.4, 4.5, and 5.3; and CL: Letter No. 12, supra n. 18, at sec. V. See also CL: OPTR Report (Taxpayers/Tax Practitioners) Questionnaire 2, Question 84.}

Following the best practice, in the \textbf{United States}, the South Carolina Department of Revenue issued a guide for taxpayers under audit, indicating what to do when selected to an audit, what to expect from it and how to challenge it, in case of disagreement.\footnote{See US: SC Department of Revenue Press Release, \textit{What to Do if Your Business is Selected for an Audit} (29 Jun. 2021), https://www.einnews.com/pr_news/545064302/what-to-do-if-your-business-is-selected-for-an-} renowned scholars have commented on the performance of the Taxpayers’ Bill of Rights, claiming its “uncertain prospects”. 688

On the other hand, Poland reports that, after 2 years, the Parliament has still not dealt with a draft Bill of Taxpayers’ Rights, developed by representatives of tax academia at the University of Lodz and introduced to Parliament by a group of opposition MPs in December 2019. In January 2020, the draft was referred to the first reading, which has not taken place yet. 689

12.3. Organizational structure for protecting taxpayers’ rights

Best practice: A taxpayer advocate or ombudsman should be established to scrutinize the operations of the tax authority, handle specific complaints and intervene in appropriate cases. Best practice is the establishment of a separate office within the tax authority but independent from the normal operations of that authority.

Shifted towards / matched the best practice:
Australia, Chile

Shifted away from the minimum standard:
Mexico

Best practice: The organizational structure for the protection of taxpayers’ rights should operate at a local level as well as nationally.

Shifted towards / matched the best practice:

Shifted away from the minimum standard:

One way for the state to further fulfil its obligations to protect taxpayers’ rights is through a specialized body, preferably independent from the tax authorities. The idea is to have an institution bestowed with the power to ensure the conditions for the highest protection of taxpayers, which is also the rationale behind a Taxpayer Advocate or a Tax Ombudsman.

As illustrated by Chart 80, 58% of the surveyed jurisdictions have such an institution. As depicted by Chart 81, 39% of these are empowered to intervene in ongoing disputes between tax authorities and taxpayers, which is a significant improvement compared to 35% in 2020.

As illustrated by Chart 82, 44% of the ombudspersons are independent.

In Australia, there has been an independent office of the taxation ombudsman since 1995. Since that time and until 2015, the taxation ombudsman function was initially performed by the Commonwealth Ombudsman, and it is now performed by the Inspector-General of Taxation. The taxation ombudsman role in Australia is not part of the tax authority. The

Parliamentary Committee mentioned above has made some recommendations for changes in the taxation ombudsman role as well, namely that the Inspector-General of Taxation be renamed the “Taxpayer Advocate”, and that the role aligns more closely with the powers and structure of the United States Taxpayer Advocate, based on the needs of the Australian tax system. The Taxpayer Advocate must continue to have the freedom and independence enjoyed by the current Inspector-General of Taxation.690

Likewise, Chile has continued its positive path towards fulfilment of the best practices since the introduction of an ombudsman in 2020. Now, in 2021, a decentralized public service office called “Tax Ombudsman” (Defensoría del Contribuyente, DEDECON) was created to assist taxpayers and to provide them legal assistance. DEDECON is independent from the Chilean tax authorities.691

Regretfully, the example set in previous years by Mexico through its Procuraduría para la Defensa del Contribuyente (PRODECON) appears to have suffered a few setbacks. An amendment to the Federal Tax Code has introduced a provision effectively limiting PRODECON’s powers, as it limits the duration of the alternative mediation conducted by it. According to the amendment, the "conclusive agreement" cannot exceed 12 months since the filing of the request.692

Finally, in the United States, the Taxpayer Advocate Service (TAS) continued to maintain offices in each state. However, the local reach of TAS was limited by coronavirus health measures. Also, TAS service levels were reduced by increased caseloads caused by reduced IRS service levels.693

| Identification of taxpayers | • Australia: Changed identity requirements, enabling taxpayers to achieve a greater online identity strength, and taxpayer access to standard identity strength was expanded.
  • Bulgaria: Amended its legislation regarding the identification numbers of self-insured persons that practised freelance professions to separate the taxpayers’ identification numbers from the persons’ unique identification numbers to protect taxpayers’ privacy.
  • Ghana: COVID-19-related measures.
  • Japan: COVID-19-related measures.
  • United States: The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) extended the scope of its identity protection programme to all those taxpayers able to verify their identity. |                                                                 |
| Information supplied by third parties and withholding obligations | • Colombia: Resolution established the conditions for secure transfers of information to local tax authorities for control purposes that is related to an optional taxation model that replaces the income tax and integrates several other taxes.
  • Turkey: Modified its Tax Procedures Act to require the partners, executives and personnel of the service providers of the revenue administration to keep the confidentiality of the information and secrets they learned about the taxpayers during the provision of their services. | • Chinese Taipei: Regulations were enacted enabling the Ministry of Finance to request financial institutions to provide information on reportable financial accounts, without any reference to confidentiality. |

- Brazil: New provisions establishing the conditions under which data protected by tax secrecy may be shared, through a secured and controlled virtual system, with other authorities of the Federal Accounting Court and the Office of the Federal Controller General.

- Bolivia: The wealth tax law states the confidentiality of the information obtained from taxpayers and third parties. Said information may only be used for tax assessment purposes and cannot be transferred to third parties without an order from the competent authority.

- Chile: An amendment to the Tax Code improved taxpayers’ access to private information, as well as the collection of the latter through digital platforms.

5. More intensive audits

The general framework

- China (People's Rep.): The tax authorities revised regulations to clarify the need to strengthen the management of case sources and add new provisions that the inspection bureau may conduct inspections before filing a case in accordance with the law, if necessary.

- Mexico: Amendments to the Federal Tax Code now require certified public accountants preparing reports on audits of financial statements for tax purposes to report to the tax authorities if they become aware of possible criminal conduct of the taxpayer.

Court authorization or notification

- Chile: New regulation requires the tax authorities to provide sufficient motivation for accessing the documentation, as well as prior notification to the taxpayer of all administrative actions in this regard.

- Brazil: The State Court of Appeals of Minas Gerais found the prior authorization by the judiciary to enter premises (an accounting office) unnecessary.

- Mexico: New provisions allow the tax authorities to seize bank deposits without a prior judicial hearing when a tax assessment has become due.

6. Reviews and appeals

The remedies and their function

- Colombia: Full digitalization of all tax proceedings, e.g. electronic notifications, obligation to email lawsuit to defendant, digital notifications, virtual hearings and electronic files.

- Peru: Electronic filing of claims to the Peruvian tax administration was implemented for the presenting an appeal, responding to information requests and sending requests related to the process.

Length of the procedure

- Colombia: COVID-19-related measures.

- Denmark: Specific scrutiny of the Danish Tax Appeal Agency’s average time spent handling an appeal has trended towards becoming shorter after an investigation into this was launched in 2016.

- Bolivia: Judicial appeals are over 6 years long on average in practice.

- Brazil: Most second-tier federal administrative proceedings have been suspended for the last few years, resulting in longer proceedings.

| Cost of proceedings | Australia: The ATO will pay the reasonable costs for the taxpayer to engage external legal representation if the taxpayer has a dispute in the Small Business Tax Division of the Administrative Appeals Tribunal and is self-represented. |
- Chile: General amendments to the Tax Code included the creation of the tax ombudsperson’s office to assist taxpayers and provide legal assistance.
- Lithuania: A legal-service information system provides residents with interactive consultations and electronic services for state-guaranteed legal aid.

| Public hearing | Uruguay: The parliament considered and rejected a bill that, if passed, would allow free access to the case law database of the High Administrative Court, including the compilation of its tax judgments. |
| Publication of judgments and privacy | Chile: New provisions expressly provide for the mandatory publication of all judicial decisions in tax matters, while they mandate the confidentiality of all actions during the proceedings. |

7. Criminal and administrative sanctions

| The general framework | Chinese Taipei: Reported to have strengthened the applicability of non bis in idem between tax penalties and tax fines. |
- Chinese Taipei: The applicable fine for tax evasion by fraud or any other unrighteous means significantly increased. Contrary to the previous legislation, the amendment no longer allows companies to avoid imprisonment by paying the fine. |

| Mutual agreement procedure | • Lithuania: Introduced mediation as an additional option for tax disputes (in general, most administrative disputes). | • Mexico: Introduced a provision in its Tax Code that maintains the tax administration’s collection powers in force, despite the taxpayer’s request to initiate a mutual agreement procedure (MAP). Consequently, the taxpayer must pay the full amount of the tax assessment when requesting a MAP. This effectively cancels the right to access a MAP in Mexico, as the taxpayer has to pay first. |
| • Turkey: Waiver for the requirement of legal action for the initiation of a MAP was repealed. This means that the application for the initiation of the MAP will only interrupt the term of litigation. For example, in the case that the contracting states do not agree, the taxpayer may resort to the litigation procedure within the remaining time. | |

12. Institutional framework for protecting taxpayers’ rights

Statement of taxpayers’ rights: Charters, service charters and taxpayers’ bills of rights

- Australia: The ATO has maintained a Taxpayers’ Charter since 1993, following from a Parliamentary Committee report. Recently, there have been recommendations for changes to the Charter to enhance enforceability, awareness and status.
- Chile: General improvement of the regulation of taxpayers’ rights due to new tax provisions.
- United Kingdom: Improvements to the drafting of its Charter and its governance, as the first annual report under this new Charter has now been composed, and an active Customer Experience Committee has been established.
- Poland: For 2 years, the parliament has not addressed the draft Bill of Taxpayers’ Rights developed by representatives of tax academia at the University of Łódź and introduced to the parliament by a group of opposition Members of Parliament in December 2019. In January 2020, the draft was referred to the first reading, which has not yet taken place.

Organizational structures for protecting taxpayers’ rights

- Australia: Recommendations for change in the taxation ombudsman role, namely that the Inspector General of Taxation be renamed the Taxpayer Advocate and that the role aligns more with the powers and structure of the US Taxpayer Advocate, based on the needs of the Australian tax system. The Taxpayer Advocate must continue to have the freedom and independence enjoyed by the current Inspector General of Taxation.
- Mexico: An amendment to the Federal Tax Code introduced a provision effectively limiting the tax ombudsman’s powers, as it limits the duration of the alternative mediation conducted by it. According to the amendment, the “conclusive agreement” cannot exceed 12 months after the filing of the request.

Appendix B: The protection of taxpayers’ rights per country (2021)

The following are the answers provided in all national reports to the questions regarding the effective implementation into domestic law of legal procedures, safeguards and guarantees associated with taxpayers’ rights in 82 specific situations, as identified in Questionnaire #1 and explained in detail in the main text of this Yearbook. Accordingly, it is not advisable to interpret the content expressed in these charts separately from the explanations in the relevant text.
