IBFD to Explore Impact of Changing International Tax Landscape on China

The 8th IBFD International Tax Conference will bring together over 200 tax professionals and distinguished speakers from IBFD, the State Administration of Taxation, China National Petroleum Corporation and Deloitte, who will examine what the historic international taxation developments of 2017 mean for China.

IBFD is pleased to announce it will host the 8th International Tax Conference at the Intercontinental Beijing Sanlitun Hotel on 22 September. Held annually in China, the goal of the IBFD International Tax Conference is to promote and develop the understanding of cross-border taxation at the highest level. With international taxation a hot topic more than ever before, the 2017 edition of the conference is set to be the most well attended in its eight-year history, attracting an appealing mix of government, academic, corporate and advisory bodies together with distinguished speakers who will explore the ground-breaking developments of the international tax landscape and their impact on China and the rest of the world.

Key topics of the 8th IBFD International Tax Conference will include the global impact of the proposed US tax reform, how the Multilateral Instrument will be implemented in China, and the highlights, related issues and practical solutions of new transfer pricing rules in the country. Additionally, with China's Belt and Road initiative in full swing, the conference will focus on outbound investment and the associated tax issues that are often overlooked by Chinese enterprises.

"The steady growth and development of the Chinese economy has spurred the interest and demand for knowledge in international taxation across all sectors in China. The International Tax Conference was created to provide a platform for those tax professionals and policymakers to share knowledge for the common good around international tax," said Victor van Kommer, Tax Services Director at IBFD and Chief Operations Officer of IBFD China. "It's very exciting to see how the conference has developed into the premier event in the country for tax professionals."
